EDINBURGH AND LEITH

WITH THEIR ENVIRONS

EDINBURGH, the capital City of Scotland, a Royal and Parliamentary Burgh, the seat of the College of Justice, the University of Edinburgh and the Assemblies of the Church of Scotland and Free Church, as also of the Episcopal and Roman Catholic dioceses of Edinburgh, is situated about two miles south of the Firth of Forth and from Leith, which forms its port. It lies in lat. 55 deg. 57 m. 23 sec. N., and longitude 3 deg. 10 min. 30 sec. W.; distant from London 392 miles (by rail 427), 91 from Carlisle (110 by rail), 55 from Berwick-upon-Tweed (57½ by rail), nearly 44 from Glasgow (47½ by rail), 43 from Dundee (by rail 66), 103 from Aberdeen, 241 from Inverness, by Aberdeen, and 191 from Inverness, by Perth. It is grouped round the abrupt mass of rock to the south of what was originally the North Loch and on which stands the old castle, the old Gaelic name being Dunedin. Down the shoulder of this hill, by a steep and winding street, runs the "Old Town," ending beyond the Canongate in the park surrounding Holyrood palace, while round this venerable centre, which has a lower hill on either side, are grouped the New Town to the north, Calton hill on the north-east, the Queen's park backed by Salisbury Craigs to the east, and behind the hill on which Heriot's hospital stands Lauriston and The Meadows lie to the south, while the district round Dean Bridge, Water of Leith and the railways lies to the west. The railways into the city are the Caledonian, connected with England at Carlisle (west coast route), and the North British vid Berwick (east coast route). By sea it is reached through its port of Leith.

HISTORY.

A great fire in 1532 and the attack on the city by the Earl of Hertford in 1544 destroyed nearly all the original buildings except the three prominent edifices which mark the western, centre and eastern points of the old town, viz.: the Castle, St. Giles' church and Holyrood, and which may be said to be the only public buildings dating prior to 1542; the Parliament House having been erected as late as 1639. The lower end of the High street is the Burgh of the Canongate, or town belonging to the Augustine Canons of the Monastery of the Holy Rood, on the site of which was built the palace. About 1020 the town became a residence for the Scottish kings, Margaret the wife of Malcolm Ceanmore dying in the castle in 1093, and early in the 12th century David I. made it his principal seat of government, founding in 1128 the Monastery of the Holy Rood, where he located a body of Augustine monks: towards the end of this century William the Lion made it a Royal burgh and a place of mintage; but 8th December, 1174, this monarch, as the price of his liberty, surrendered it by the treaty of Falaise to Henry II. King of England, by whom it was retained till 1189. In the year 1214 a parliament first assembled here, in the reign of Alexander II. In 1239 a general council of the Scottish Church met here; and during the reign of Alexander III. it became the royal residence and the depository of the records and regalia of the kingdom. In 1291 the town and castle were surrendered to King Edward I.; but were speedily regained by the Scots, who held them until the fatal battle of Dunbar, in 1294, enabled Edward to recapture them. The castle continued in the possession of the English until 1312, when it once more reverted to Scotland. In 1326, the fourteenth parliament of Bruce met in Holyrood Abbey; and the next year was memorable for the admission of the borough representatives among those of the other estates and for the confirmation of the treaty of Northampton, by which the independence of Scotland was acknowledged by Edward III. About 1327 Robert I. granted a charter to the inhabitants of Edinburgh, and placed under their dominion the town of Leith, "with its harbour and mills," and in 1371 Robert II. made it the capital. During the reign of Edward III. the castle twice changed hands; in 1385 the English under Richard II. burnt and plundered the abbey, and in 1400 Henry IV. while taking the town spared the abbey, in consideration of kindness shown to his father in 1381: the Scots about 1406 regained the possession of Edinburgh and the city continued to increase in importance, until it became the residence of the chief functionaries of the government, after the murder of James I. in 1436-7, and was the recognized metropolis of the kingdom. Edinburgh now rapidly increased in population; and as it was hemmed in by walls, houses of great height were erected, and very close together. At this period the street was formed called the Cowgate, parallel to the main street on the south, at the bottom of the ridge, now one of the poorest and most narrow streets in the Old Town. About the middle of the 15th century Edinburgh was encircled by walls, at the instigation of James II., the marriage of which monarch with Mary Gueldres, and her coronation, were celebrated with great pomp in 1449 in the Abbey of Holyrood, which abbey became the tomb of the king eleven years afterwards. The turbulent reign of James III. succeeded, during which the sites of the markets were determined, the provost made sheriff of the town, and various municipal privileges granted to the inhabitants. In token of the bravery and loyalty of the inhabitants, a banner was also given to them, to be displayed "in defence of their king, their country and their own rights." This flag, from its colour, received the name of the "blue blanket," and remains in the custody of the convener of the trades, at whose appearance therewith, says tradition, not only the artificers of Edinburgh, but those of the whole kingdom, are to repair to it, and fight under the convener. On all great pageants, this memorial of the loyalty of Edinburgh is ostentatiously displayed. In 1508 the thickly-wooded lands of the "Borough Moor" were cleared of their trees, in virtue of powers granted by the king; and, in order to obtain purchasers for the timber, the magistrates enacted that "whoever bought as much as would be sufficient to make a new front for his house might extend the same seven feet further into the street;" by which impolitic permission the town was filled with wooden houses and the main street contracted in width.

The year 1513 was memorable for the double calamity of the plague and the disastrous defeat at Flodden. The latter misfortune filled Edinburgh with consternation; all capable of bearing arms were ordered to defend the walls, and the Privy Council for safety adjourned to Stirling, where James V. was crowned. At this crisis the fortifications were strengthened and a new wall built, which encompassed the high ground on the south, parts of which still remain. The plague continuing its virulence, the young king was removed to Dalkeith or Craigmillar. During his minority, the Earl of Arran and Cardinal Beatoun, jealous of the influence acquired by the Earl of Angus, through his marriage with the Queen Dowager, attacked him and his partizans in the street, near the Netherbow port, in which conflict more than two hundred and fifty men were slain, and the residue of the Hamilton or Arran party expelled by the Douglases, or by the Angus faction. This bloody affair was designated by the populace, "Cleanse the Causeway." In consequence of the prevailing disquietude, the Privy Council and Parliament frequently met in the Tolbooth, or common gaol. In 1514 a small protective force was appointed, afterwards known by the name of the "City Guard," and maintained up to 1817. In 1528 excitements and disturbances arose in the city, from the secret diffusion of the principles of the Reformation.

In the year 1532 the College of Justice, consisting of 14 judges under a president, was established by James V. with its seat in the city, and from this time dates also the Society of Advocates. A great fire in this year destroyed part of the city, and about this period rows of obstructing tenements were removed, and many salutary regulations enforced: the High street was paved, and lanterns were ordered to be hung out at night by the inhabitants. In 1534, Norman Gourlay and David Straiton were tried and condemned at Holyrood for heresy, and executed at Greenside: in 1543, the magistrates having thought proper to deprive the craftsmen of the privilege of voting at the election of provosts and bailies, the deacons drew their swords in the council chamber: in 1544 Henry VIII. of England, in revenge for the opposition made by the Catholic regency of Arran and Beatoun to the marriage of his son Edward with the young Queen Mary, sent an army and fleet to ravage Scotland, under the command of the Earl of Hertford, who, landing at Leith, set fire to Edinburgh and burnt the abbey and palace at Holyrood. The attempt to capture the castle was unsuccessful; but the departing foe destroyed the pier of Leith, seized the ships in the harbour, and "neither pyle, village, town, nor house, in their way homewards was left unburnt." In consequence of this outrage, a French garrison was introduced four years afterwards, under D'Esse, who fortified Leith.

About the year 1556, the reformer, John Knox, became conspicuous, and subsequently the Reformation made rapid progress in Scotland, but not without strife and bloodshed, as the Protestant mobs destroyed many of the religious houses. On the anniversary of Saint Giles, the patron saint of Edinburgh, the priests and monks were attacked and the effigy of the saint, which they were carrying in procession, was destroyed: it is fortunate that the rage of the reformers in Edinburgh was confined to the decorations and furniture of the churches, so that two of the chief ecclesiastical edifices still remain, while the convents and monasteries were converted into dwelling houses. But for the arrival of an English force to the assistance of the Protestants, the issue of the contest would have been doubtful. The first assembly of the reformed kirk met in Edinburgh on the 15th January, 1560, a parliament having been held the same year, which passed a law establishing the Presbyterian form of government for the Church of Scotland. On the 9th of August, 1561, Mary Queen of Scots landed at Leith from France, and was well received, but her predilection for the Romish ritual soon abated her popularity. Darnley was proclaimed king at the market cross on the 30th of July, 1565, having the previous day (Sunday), within the chapel of Holyrood, become the husband of Queen Mary. On the 9th of the following March, David Rizzio, the Italian favourite of the queen, was murdered in the palace by Darnley and his confederates. On the 19th of June, 1566, the queen gave birth to a son, afterwards James the Sixth of Scotland, and the First of England. On the 10th of February, 1567, while Darnley sojourned in a secluded house, called the Kirk-o'-Field, near the site of the present University, it was blown up by gunpowder, and he lost his life. Many circumstances coincided to involve the Earl of Bothwell in suspicion of planning the murder and the queen of guilty privity: be this as it may, Bothwell, having divorced himself from his wife, became the husband of the queen on 15 May, 1567, three months after its perpetration. This marriage took place in the palace of Holyrood, and was the occasion of fresh disturbances in Edinburgh. So formidable was the insurrection, that the queen and Bothwell, on the 6th of June, fled first to Borthwick Castle, and thence to Dunbar, which abandonment of the capital was followed by the entry of 3,000 insurgents. On the 15th June, 1567, the queen was brought back to Edinburgh, and the next day was sent a prisoner to Lochleven Castle. A regency was then formed in the name of the infant son of Mary, James VI., and the Earl of Moray was proclaimed regent; but the assassination of this popular favourite, 20 June, 1570, at Linlithgow, threw the capital into confusion. The struggle between the contending parties was renewed with alternate ascendency: the Earl of Lennox became the new regent, and Kirkcaldy of Grange, the provost of the town and governor of the castle, declared for the queen, whose party held a parliament in the Tolbooth, while that of the regent held theirs in the Canongate. Kirkcaldy seized all the arms he could find and planted a battery on the steeple of St. Giles, and being supplied by France with money and ammunition, he and his associates became formidable antagonists to the regency. The Earl of Morton and the regent, on the other side, having united, fortified Leith, and for two years the two parties waged a fluctuating warfare, until Queen Elizabeth of England, at the entreaty of Morton, sent a small army from Berwick, which soon reduced the castle, and the captive Kirkcaldy, with his brother, were hanged at the Cross, 3 August, 1573, although they had surrendered under promise of merciful treatment. The young king having decided to assume the government himself, entered the city with great pomp, and convened a parliament in the Tolbooth, and tranquillity was in some degree restored. The Earl of Morton, the late regent, being accused as an accessory to the murder of Darnley, was convicted and executed by a machine called the "maiden," similar to the guillotine, and alleged to be an invention of his own. The University of Edinburgh, founded with money bequeathed by a Bishop of Ross in 1558, was finished, and received a royal charter from James VI. April, 1582, and around it arose many subordinate colleges and schools. The poor, also, were not forgotten; funds for the maintenance of the poor were granted from the revenues of the suppressed religious houses and their lands. The city council presented James with 5,000 merks, about £280 sterling, to provide an entertainment, and early in 1590 they were required to send a ship to Denmark, at the cost of £500, to bring home the king and his bride, who was crowned at Holyrood 17 May, 1590; they also presented the bride with a valuable jewel, pledged to them by the king as security for a considerable sum advanced him. Still these munificent donations did not exempt the citizens from "intolerable impositions and grievous exactions." In 1591 the Earl of Bothwell made a daring but unsuccessful attempt to seize the person of the king: Bothwell escaped, but eight of his followers were executed. A fresh cause of tumult soon arose; the young Earl of Moray, the heir of the regent, was assassinated by the Earl of Huntly; and, as the king was suspected of connivance, the citizens indignantly arose and openly insulted both the king and his ministers. James thought it prudent to retreat to Glasgow. Not long afterwards the monarch was presented by these same citizens with ten tuns of wine, and a hundred of their number were in attendance at the baptism of Prince Henry: a guard of fifty citizens was also appointed to protect his person from Bothwell. In December, 1596, James, by an attempt to restrain the freedom of the preachers, excited an insurrection that occasioned his prerogative to be insulted and his person to be endangered. He, in consequence, retired from the city and ordered all the public courts to be removed. In 1596 James was again in collision with his subjects in consequence of some English players being introduced into the city. At this period an important alteration was made in the computation of time. The year had hitherto commenced on the 25th of March, but by a Convention of Estates, which met on the 10th of December, 1599, it was ordered that in future New Year's Day should be on the 1st of January.

In 1600, the Duke of Rohan, having visited Edinburgh, states that the city was about one thousand paces in length and from four to five hundred in breadth; and adds that there was nothing remarkable in it but the great street (now High street), which was very long and broad, and extended from one end of the town to the other; the houses, he says, were not sumptuous, being almost all built of wood.

On the 24th of March, 1603, by the death of Queen Elizabeth, James became king of England, to which country he immediately departed, after taking formal farewell of the citizens of Edinburgh at the church of St. Giles. In this year the king ordered the magistrates of Edinburgh to wear gowns and have a sword of state carried before them; but instead of sending the amount of his debt to them, 59,000 merks, he obliged them to be content with 20,000, in full settlement of all demands; notwithstanding which, when the king paid his long-promised visit to his Scottish capital, in 1618, he was received with pomp and addressed with adulation. They entertained him with a banquet, and presented him with a silver basin with 10,000 merks (about £560 sterling) in it, in double gold angels. A parliament was immediately convened, and among other acts which it passed was one for the restitution of archbishops, bishops and chapters. About this time the town council purchased the mills of Bonnington from Robert and John Logan, with the lands and teinds belonging to them, for 1,230 merks Scots (£68 6s. 8d. sterling). In 1621 an Act was passed for the covering of houses with lead, slates or tiles, instead of thatch, and water was introduced the same year by pipes; three new bells were imported from Holland—two for St. Giles's church and one for the Netherbow port. March 27th, 1625, James died; and on the 31st Charles I. was proclaimed king in his stead; and 15th June, 1633, he was crowned king of Scotland in the Abbey of Holyrood.

The erection of Edinburgh into a bishopric, and an order for the introduction of a liturgy into the churches, caused great tumult in the city, 23rd July, 1637, and in a general assembly at Glasgow, in 1638, resolutions were passed condemning the liturgy and deposing the bishops. In August, 1641, Charles visited Edinburgh. The "great rebellion," as it is termed, broke out shortly after, during which the "solemn league and covenant" between the two nations for the extirpation of prelacy was signed in the High church, Edinburgh, in July, 1643, and 1,200 men were sent in consequence to assist the English Parliamentary forces against Charles; but in 1645, the Covenanters being routed by Montrose, at Kilsyth, Edinburgh was threatened with destruction by the marquess unless the prisoners of the king's party were instantly released, and the city at this moment being desolated by the plague, his demands were complied with. On the 18th May, 1650, the Marquess of Montrose was brought a prisoner into Edinburgh, and three days after was hanged at the Cross.

The Scots being averse to Republicanism, proclaimed the exiled Charles the Second as their king, and crowned him at Stirling, 1st January, 1651. In December, 1650, after the battle of Dunbar, Cromwell was in possession of Edinburgh and its castle, but the magistrates had fled to Stirling, the head-quarters of Charles, leaving the city to be governed by thirty chosen citizens. The battle of Worcester having placed Scotland completely in the power of Cromwell, commissioners were sent by him from England to rule the kingdom, who arrived at Dalkeith in January, 1652; and from them the humble citizens were obliged to obtain consent ere they could elect new magistrates. Under the sway of Cromwell, Edinburgh and Leith enjoyed repose; but so greatly were they impoverished by so many years of strife, that very few of the inhabitants were in a condition to pay their debts, and the magistrates were served with a charge of horning for £50,000 Scots (£43,833 6s. 8d. sterling), which, with difficulty, they obtained time to pay.

During the period of the Commonwealth many reforms were introduced in the municipal regulations. At the restoration of Charles II. in 1660 the town council, in return for a donation of £1,000 made to his Majesty, received permission to levy a tax upon the citizens of one-third of a penny on each pint of ale, and twopence on each pint of wine consumed in the city. Adam Woodcock, at this period, was licensed by the town council to run a coach between Edinburgh and Leith, the fare to be fourpence each person; and the baron bailie of Broughton had a grant made to him of the goods and chattels of all women condemned for witchcraft. In August, 1660, the English tribunals gave place to the ancient forms of government, and the first Parliament, which assembled 1st January, 1661, rescinded all Acts passed during the last twenty-three years, and restored episcopacy. Severities towards the Presbyterians followed. The Covenanters of the west and south rose in arms. They reached the Pentland Hills on the 28th November, 1666, where they were overtaken by General Dalziel, with a body of cavalry, and dispersed. About fifty were killed, and one hundred and fifty taken prisoners—twenty of these were executed at Edinburgh. In 1672 the Court of Justiciary was instituted. In 1678, it appears from a "list of the hail possessors (of houses) in the different parishes," taken under authority of the magistrates, that there were at this time within the royalty, 3,333 families, so that, taking five as the average number of each, the population amounted to 16,665.

In 1679 the Duke of York (afterwards James II.) came to reside in Edinburgh, but though popular at first gradually estranged the people by his attachment to the ancient faith and by having a private chapel for the Roman ritual arranged in the palace. In January, 1685, an equestrian statue of Charles II. was ordered for the Parliamentary square, and in February of the same year the king died, and James was proclaimed at the Cross as VII. of Scotland and II. of England. In June, 1685, the 9th Earl of Argyll was executed for a rising in favour of the Duke of Monmouth; the earl having been indebted to Heriot's Hospital to the amount of £58,403 10s. Scots, the corporation of Edinburgh was compelled to pay the money. The suspension of the test soon disclosed the intentions of the king. Early in 1685 every printer and bookseller in Edinburgh was forbidden by the Privy Council to print or sell any book animadverting on the Romish faith; this brought about several riots, which were energetically suppressed by the magistracy, and the king as a recognition of their attachment restored to them the impost upon ale. Upon the arrival of the Prince of Orange, the Presbyterians got the upper hand, and the abbey was pillaged and the Chapel Royal destroyed, while the Earl of Perth (the chancellor) fled from the city.

On the 14th of March, 1689, the Convention of Estates assembled—the most momentous meeting that Edinburgh ever witnessed. It resolved that James having forfeited the crown, it should be offered to William and Mary; a second result of their deliberations was the memorable "claim of rights;" a new election of municipal officers was advised, by poll of the burgesses paying, watching and warding, and liable for other public claims; several ministers were deprived of their pulpits for refusing to pray for the new sovereigns; the convention became a parliament, and the established religion was declared Presbyterian. The Duke of Gordon held the castle for James, but surrendered it in June, 1690. Towards the close of William's reign, six ships sailed from the Firth of Forth to plant a colony on the Isthmus of Darien; and when the failure of this scheme became known in March, 1699, the miscarriage of the enterprise was attributed to the influence of the king, and serious riots took place. On Saturday, the 3rd of February, 1700, a fire broke out on the south side of Parliament square, which destroyed an extensive pile of buildings, including the Advocates' Library and the Bank of Scotland, and rendered houseless nearly 200 families.

In the reign of Queen Anne the discussion of the terms of Union caused disturbances from the early part of 1703 to 1707, which showed how unpopular the measure was, and the parliament and commissioners were compelled to seek the protection of the military during the ratification of the articles. From the 1st May, 1707, when the Act of Union came into operation, the aspect of the Scottish capital became strikingly changed, improvement ceased, and for nearly half a century little activity or energy was displayed. In 1715 two attempts were made by the Jacobite party to get possession of the city, both of which failed. In 1730, at the execution of Wilson for smuggling, a riot occurred, and Captain Porteous, commandant of the town guard, ordered his men to fire on the people, killing some; for this he was committed for trial, but the populace suspected that he would be let off, and early one morning a small but well organised mob, preceded by the town drummer of the Canongate, marched up the High street, disarmed the town guard, broke open the Tolbooth, and taking Porteous out hung him from a dyer's pole in the Grassmarket, dispersing immediately he was dead; and it is not the least extraordinary circumstance connected with this singular affair, that none of the actors in the tragedy were ever discovered, although a large reward was offered. In 1745, Prince Charles Edward, after the king's cavalry brigade had retired in disorder from Corstorphine, sent forward a regiment of Athol Highlanders, who took possession of the town but failed to get the castle. The prince entered Holyrood, where he held levees and gave balls, and on 21st September he left to fight the battle of Prestonpans and march on London. In 1778, the mutiny of Lord Seaforth's Highland regiment, on account of their being ordered to India without payment of some arrears, and a stipulation as to the limit of their service, occasioned a considerable sensation. The mutineers ascended the lofty eminence of Arthur's Seat, where they remained encamped until an adjustment was effected by Lords Dunmore and Macdonald. During the long war which ensued on the French revolution, and when the country was in dread of invasion, volunteer companies were formed in Edinburgh. The visit of George IV. lasted from 15th August, 1822, to the 29th. He took up his abode at Dalkeith House, as the guest of the Duke of Buccleuch, held a levee at Holyrood, and attended public worship on Sunday in the High Church. On the 20th the king was present at the ball of the Caledonian Hunt, and next evening he saw "Rob Roy" performed at the theatre. A splendid banquet was prepared for his Majesty, in the great hall of the Parliament House, by the lord provost, magistrates and town council. The lord provost received a baronetcy.

On the 1st September, 1842, Her late Majesty Queen Victoria landed at Granton, and proceeded to Dalkeith; the reception was a quiet one, as the magistracy of Edinburgh did not expect the landing to take place so early, and did not get to the city boundary in time. A levee and drawing room were held at Holyrood Palace, and there was a procession through the city. On Tuesday morning, September 6th, Her Majesty took her departure for the north. On Monday, the 14th, the Queen again passed through Edinburgh on her way to Dalkeith, to embark at Granton.

The Castle of Edinburgh, founded in 617, on the site of the Pictish Tower of Refuge, used by them for the protection of their women and valuables, occupies the western and highest extremity of the central ridge on which the old town is built. It is a polygonal fort, standing on a scarped rock rising abruptly about 400 feet from the plain, south of the north rock, and accessible only from the eastern side; its principal faces lying east, where the Halfmoon battery dominates the approach; south, where the old palace and barracks overhang the Grassmarket; south-west, where the new barracks look down on Castle terrace; north-west backed by the storehouse and magazine and looking towards the Dean cemetery; and the north front, which (trending rather to the south-east) contains the Argyll battery, overlooking the site of the old North loch. The entrance to the castle is from the head of the Castle hill, across the Esplanade, on which stand monuments to the Duke of York, to the officers and men of the 78th Regiment (Ross-shire Buffs) and to Col. Mackenzie, 92nd Highlanders. Over a dry ditch by a road passing below the Halfmoon, and reaching the crest of the hill, near the governor's house and new barracks, a turn to the left then leads to the chapel of St. Margaret. Here is to be seen a curious piece of ancient ordnance, called "Mons Meg," made of longitudinal bars of hammered iron, girt with iron hoops; it is 13 feet in length and 20 inches in calibre. Stone balls were fired from it, and some of them lie beside it. It is supposed to have been made at Mons, in the 15th century. It burst in 1682, on being fired in honour of the Duke of York's visit to Scotland. It was carried to London in 1754, and brought back in 1829. To the right a passage at the rear of the Halfmoon gives access to the Old Palace quadrangle, entering at the north-east angle. The building on the east side is the Old Palace, containing the crown room, and here are kept the regalia of Scotland, which, during the Commonwealth, were removed for safety to Dunnottar Castle, under the care of the Ogilvies, but the castle being attacked by General Lambert, the regalia, by direction of Lady Ogilvie, were secretly removed in 1651 to the manse of Kinneff and concealed under the floor of the church, below the pulpit. From 1707 to 1818 they were left undisturbed in a strong chest in the Castle of Edinburgh, but at the latter date the chest was opened and its historic contents carefully examined. The crown consists of a band or fillet of pure gold, highly ornamented with precious stones and pearls, and surmounted by a circlet of ten crosses fleury and ten fleurs-de-lis, placed alternately, and enriched with pearls, and having single pearls, raised on points, between them: from this circlet spring the arches of the crown, which are extremely narrow, and adorned with leaves or crockets in red and gold, and support an orb of blue enamel, powdered with gold stars: the surmounting cross is of black enamel, ornamented with arabesque work and oriental pearls: within the crown is a velvet cap, rising to the arches, and adorned with four large pearls, set in gold and enamel. The sceptre is of silver-gilt, 33⅝ inches long, and has a hexagonal shaft divided by moulded bands: the top, expanding, supports three dolphins, with heads upwards, supporting in turn a globe of rock-crystal, encircled by gold bands and carrying a finial terminating in a pearl: between the dolphins are figures of the Virgin and Child, St. James the Great, and St. Andrew: this sceptre was originally given by Pope Alexander VI. to James IV. in 1494, but was re-made in 1536. The sword of state, presented to James IV. in 1507 by Pope Julius the Great, is of Italian workmanship, and five feet in length: the grip is baluster-shaped, and has a flattish circular pommel: the guard is formed of two dolphins facing to the centre, with curled tails, and between these is a large spreading leaf ornament overlapping the scabbard, which is of crimson velvet, ornamented with repoussée work in silver. The Lord Treasurer's rod is of silver-gilt, and about three feet in length: the shaft is plain with moulded bands, and supports an oval globe of rock-crystal, cut into square facets, and enclosed with four bands, carrying a cross pattée: it is perhaps of the 16th century. There are also preserved here certain other relics, viz.:—the Coronation ring of Charles I. a fine ruby, engraved with a cross and set in diamonds: the Collar and George of the Garter, sent by Queen Elizabeth to James VI.; and the badge of the Order of the Thistle, all which were bequeathed to George III. by Henry Stuart, Cardinal, and titular Duke of York, who died at Rome, 13 July, 1807. In a small room on the ground floor of this palace, Mary Queen of Scots gave birth on the 19th of June, 1566, to her only son, James VI. of Scotland, afterwards James I. of England. The oak panels have been renewed after their original form, and copies of original portraits of Queen Mary and her son placed in it. The south side of the court yard is occupied by the old Parliament House, restored in 1887, and the remaining two sides are barracks. St. Margaret's chapel was dedicated to the wife of King Malcolm Ceanmore. The area of the rock on which the castle stands measures about seven statute acres, and the highest point is 437 feet above the level of the sea. Within are magazines and store-rooms for upwards of 30,000 stand of arms, and barracks for 2,000 men with their officers. In 1093, Malcolm III. (Malcolm Ceanmore), having fallen in battle at Alnwick, the castle of Edinburgh was besieged by Donald Bane, his brother, who aspired to the crown, to which the old Scottish customs gave him a right to pretend, although Malcolm had left children. The castle fell into the hands of the besiegers, the garrison escaping by a postern, under shelter of a thick fog, and carrying with them to Dunfermline the body of Margaret, Malcolm's queen, known as St. Margaret, the sister of Edgar Atheling, whom the Saxons of England sought to elevate to the throne after the battle of Hastings. William the Lion occasionally resided in the castle of Edinburgh, and in 1174 it was delivered up to the English, pledged for his ransom when taken prisoner at the battle of Alnwick, but shortly after restored on his marriage with the sister of Viscount Beaumont. In 1239 the daughter of Henry III. of England, marrying Alexander III. had this castle assigned for her residence. During the contest between Bruce and Baliol, in 1296, the castle was besieged and taken by the English. It was several times taken and retaken, during the struggle which then began, and ultimately decided in favour of the independence of Scotland by the battle of Bannockburn.

In 1297 it was dismantled by Sir William Wallace; having been repaired, it again fell into the hands of the English, when Robert Bruce caused it, with the other recovered fortresses, to be demolished. It was in ruins in 1336, when it served for a retreat to the Count of Namur's forces, after their defeat by the Earl of Moray. It remained in ruins till 1337, when Edward III. of England gave orders for its being rebuilt and placed a strong garrison in it. In 1341 it was surprised by William Douglas. In 1371 David II. died in it. In 1400 the castle was taken by Henry IV. of England. It was seized by the Earl of Douglas in 1416 and held by him till 1418. After the murder of James I. at Perth, 1436, his queen and the royal family took refuge in the castle. James II. in the year 1438, was detained here by Sir William Crichton, the chancellor, till he was conveyed with his own consent out of the castle in a wardrobe chest. Here, too, William, sixth Earl of Douglas, and his brother David, were, in 1440, basely murdered by Crichton, who envied the earl's riches and dreaded his power. James III. was also confined in this castle by his subjects for nine months, till he was released in the year 1482 by the Duke of Albany, who, assisted by the citizens of Edinburgh, surprised the castle, which was converted into a state prison for James V. and his brother, while infants. In 1573 this fortress was held for the unfortunate Queen Mary, at that time a prisoner in Fotheringay Castle, by the faithful and heroic Kirkcaldy of Grange, who resolutely defended it for thirty-three days. When the fortifications were battered down, the blockhouse on the east taken by assault, every supply of water exhausted and the garrison in mutiny, he made an honourable capitulation—not to the regent Morton, but to Sir William Drury, commander of the English forces, on a guarantee of honourable treatment; but Queen Elizabeth, regardless alike of her general's honour and her own, gave the prisoners up to the regent's disposal and Kirkcaldy was hung. In 1650 the castle sustained a siege of about two months by the Parliamentary army, commanded by Cromwell, and at last yielded on honourable terms. After the flight of James II. at the close of 1688, it was long held for him by the Duke of Gordon, with a weak and ill-provided garrison. During this time the Viscount Dundee, better known in Scottish history and tradition as Graham of Claverhouse, clambered up the precipice to hold a conference with Gordon, before he raised an army in the Highlands on behalf of James. In 1715 an unsuccessful attempt was made by the Jacobites to surprise this fortress; and in 1745, although the Highlanders were masters of the town, they did not venture to attack the castle. During the war in the beginning of the last century a number of French prisoners were confined in the castle, but since then there have been no further memorable events in its history.

The Argyll tower of the castle, formerly called the "Constable tower," and built towards the end of the 14th century, was restored under the direction of Mr. Hippolyte Blane, architect, who also superintended the interior renovation of the guard room: and a new infirmary and isolation ward were erected in 1893, under the immediate supervision of Major Norris R.E.

OLD AND NEW EDINBURGH.

The present city of Edinburgh consists of two parts, called the Old Town and the New; the Old Town covers the elevated ridge sloping from the summit of the castle on the west to the foot of the Canongate on the east. The New Town is built on the more level ground, which forms a gentle declivity towards the north, a continuous street uniting it with Leith on the north-east. These two divisions are separated by a deep hollow, through which passes one of the principal lines of railway, connecting Edinburgh with the west and north of Scotland. The North Bridge and the Mound cross the hollow and connect the Old Town with the New. Provost Drummond, on the 21st of October, 1763, laid the first stone of the North Bridge, the completion of which formed a ready connection with the New Town; this bridge was widened in 1876 and in 1899 was replaced by a new bridge, the foundation stone of which was laid with Masonic honours by Lord Provost Macdonald, on 25th May, 1896, and which, as completed, consists of three arches, each 175 feet span, in place of the old one of 11 narrow arches, thus affording means of enlarging and improving the Waverley station; the North British Railway Company contribute towards the cost of the new bridge. In 1767 an Act was passed for extending the royalty over the fields to the north; the New Town was immediately commenced and the buildings proceeded with so much rapidity that in 1771 St. Andrew square and the streets which open upon it were nearly finished; since which, streets, squares, places, terraces, crescents, circuses and public edifices have arisen in rapid succession, wholly built of stone. The principal streets of the original parallelogram, styled the New Town, are three—Princes street, George street and Queen street, and these are intersected by others at right angles. Princes street extends nearly in a straight line from east to west for about a mile; it partakes of the character of a terrace, facing the Old Town, from which it is separated by a wide valley laid out as public gardens; these are divided into two sections by the Mound, opposite Hanover street, on which are built the Royal Institution and the National Gallery. George street, 115 feet broad, which runs down the centre of the parallelogram, is terminated by a fine square, called St. Andrew square, on the east, and by another named Charlotte square at its western extremity. Queen street, which forms the north side of the parallelogram, consists, like Princes street, of a single row of houses, which look northwards, and command from their upper windows a view of the Firth of Forth and the opposite coast and hills of Fife. In front of Queen street are Queen Street-gardens, northward of which is the second part of the New Town, beginning with Abercrombie place and Heriot row, which look towards the gardens. A central street of this part of the New Town is called Great King street, and is terminated, like George street, by large open areas; one of these is named Drummond place, the other the Royal circus. A third section of the New Town occupies a site formerly the park of the Earl of Moray, between Charlotte square and the Water of Leith, comprising Moray place, Ainslie place, Randolph crescent, and other streets to the west. A noble bridge of four arches, called Dean bridge, crosses the Water of Leith on the north-west of this part of the New Town, the height of the bridge being 105 feet above the bed of the stream, which here flows through a deep dell or ravine.

The New Town also comprehends Leith walk, the road connecting Leith with Edinburgh, and the buildings on the slopes of the Calton hill, including the magnificent terraces called Regent terrace, Carlton terrace and Royal terrace. Above these terraces, on the slope of the hill, are extensive gardens, whilst the summit of the Calton hill is crowned with monuments. In a line with Princess street is a grand approach to the city from the east by the Regent's bridge, which passes over the unsightly district called the Low Calton. The Act of Parliament authorising the erection of this bridge and the formation of the road, the greatest and most useful of the architectural improvements of Edinburgh, was passed in 1814; the bridge was finished in March, 1819. The arch over the Low Calton is 50 feet wide, 45 in height on the north side and 54 on the south. In connection with the New Town the city has recently extended westward, on the Glasgow road, where Murrayfield, at first a cluster of villas, at some distance from the city, may now be regarded as a suburb. Towards the north, also, the New Town is completely connected by groups of villas with Granton, Trinity, Newhaven and Leith.

The Old Town of Edinburgh extends a slight distance to the northward and southward of the central ridge occupied by the High street, which is itself prolonged up the acclivity westward, under the names of Lawnmarket and Castle hill, to the gate of the castle; eastward it assumes the name of Canongate, and terminates at Holyrood Palace. Canongate was formerly a separate burgh, but is now municipally, as well as for parliamentary representation, incorporated with Edinburgh. Many of the nobles of Scotland once had residences in the Canongate. The old burgh of Portsburgh, to the south-west of the Old Town, is now also incorporated with the extended city.

The Old Town, rendered quaint and picturesque by the height and crowding of the buildings, was in a sanitary point of view somewhat defective, especially in the narrow closes which radiate like the small bones of a fish from either side of the High street and which contained in their lofty tenement houses a very dense population. The comprehensive scheme of Old Town improvement proposed and matured by Dr. William Chambers, and authorised by an Act of 1867, consisted in opening up new streets, widening some of the closes and leaving open spaces. Several of the crowded districts were cleared out and new streets formed. The accounts of this scheme were finally closed in 1889.

The Cowgate is a narrow street to the south of the High street, and nearly parallel to it, at the bottom of the ridge. Of the streets leading southwards from the High street, the two principal ones are carried over the Cowgate by bridges. South Bridge street is the chief outlet from the city to the south. Its prolongation receives the name of Nicolson street and Clerk street, and terminates in the road to Penicuik and Peebles. It is a street of good houses and shops, and in it are the University, Surgeons' Hall, and other fine buildings.

About the time the New Town began to be built, an extension to the south took place, of which the chief evidence is to be found in George square, closely adjacent to the densely-populated parts of the Old Town. To the south, Newington, on the Penicuik road, is a pleasant suburb; the village of Morningside, more to the west, is incorporated with the town; and between Newington and Morningside is the well-built Grange district, while to the west the district of Merchiston is covered with villa residences. These quarters have a milder climate than the New Town, being sheltered from the cold easterly winds by the Salisbury crags.

MUNICIPAL.

Before the Scottish Burgh Reform Act, passed in 1833, the Corporation of Edinburgh was of a close character, though not altogether without an admixture of popular representation. The city was later divided into thirteen wards for municipal and parliamentary elections, and returned two members to Parliament, but under the "Redistribution of Seats Act, 1885," the parliamentary and municipal limits were assimilated and separated into four divisions, and two additional representatives were granted.

Under the provisions of the "Edinburgh Extension Act, 1896," the whole of the "burgh of Portobello" was added to the city of Edinburgh. Under subsequent Acts the whole parish of Duddingston (of which the burgh of Portobello formed a part) and a portion of the parish of Leith were added to the city of Edinburgh, for municipal purposes, and these districts now form one municipal and parish ward of the city, which is known as Portobello ward. The extended city is now divided into sixteen wards.

The administration of the municipal and police affairs of the city of Edinburgh is vested in the Town Council, now consisting, by the extension, of fifty members. Of this number, one (the Dean of Guild) is annually returned by the Guild brethren; one (the Deacon Convener) is annually returned by the Incorporated Trades, and forty-eight are appointed by popular election—three for each of the sixteen wards into which the city is divided. The Council appoints from the ward-elected members a lord provost, seven bailies and a city treasurer. The Lord Provost is Lord-Lieutenant of the county of the city, and his office, as respects dignity and duties, resembles that of the Lord Mayor of London, while the functions of the bailies are analogous to those of the aldermen. Of the ward-elected members of Council one-third must retire annually, but the Lord Provost and the City Treasurer hold their offices for three years from the time of appointment. The magistrates of Edinburgh hold criminal and civil courts, and along with the Sheriffs of Edinburghshire are judges in the police court. The Dean of Guild presides in the Dean of Guild court, which exercises jurisdiction in matters relating to the erection, alteration and sanitary arrangement of buildings, and is possessed of considerable powers for insuring the public safety in regard to removal or reconstruction of insecure and dangerous buildings within the city. The City Treasurer is chairman of the Treasurer's or Finance Committee, and represents in the Town Council the financial department of the Corporation business. The ordinary income of the "Common Good" of the city is about £34,000. There were formerly fourteen incorporated trades in the city, but there are now only twelve, the Surgeons and Barbers (who had a "seal of cause" from the Town Council in 1505) having ceased to exist as an incorporation connected with the city trades. The following are the twelve existing incorporations:—1. The Goldsmiths, formerly attached to the Hammermen, were constituted in 1581, and have their hall in South Bridge street. 2. The Skinners or Glovers were incorporated in 1586. 3. The Furriers were constituted by Act of Council in 1593. 4. The Hammermen were incorporated in 1483, and consisted at first of blacksmiths, goldsmiths, lorimers, saddlers, cutlers and armourers, but the goldsmiths were separated from them in 1581; they meet in the chapel of St. Mary Magdalen, in the Cowgate. 5 and 6. The Wrights and Masons were constituted in 1475, but by a decree of the Court of Session in 1703 the bowmakers, glaziers, plumbers and upholsterers were added to the masons; and to the wrights were attached the painters, slaters, sievewrights and coopers; this incorporation is known also by the title of the United Incorporation of St. Mary's Chapel. 7. The Tailors were incorporated in 1500. 8. The Bakers were in existence as a corporate body before 1522, but the exact period of their constitution is unknown. 9. The Fleshers (or butchers) were incorporated before 1488. 10. The Cordwainers (or shoemakers) in 1449. 11. The Websters (or weavers) in 1475. 12. The Bonnetmakers were incorporated in 1530, and in 1640 the trade of Lilster (or dyer) was united with them. The Candlemakers were chartered by the magistrates in 1517, although they are not one of the incorporated trades, and have no vote in the election of the Deacon Convener. Scottish trade incorporations formerly possessed exclusive rights of trading within their respective burghs, but these privileges were abolished by statute in 1846. The incorporated trades or "craftsmen" of Edinburgh possess considerable properties and funds, and they maintain and manage an institution (the Maiden Hospital) for the education and upbringing of daughters of freemen craftsmen.

The Police Establishment was remodelled in 1822, and several important changes have been made in it since from time to time. When the boundaries of the city were extended in 1882, a considerable addition was made. The police force now numbers 624 men. The chief police office is situated in High street, and there are 14 sub-offices in different parts of the city, all of these being handsome buildings. A Police Court is held daily, the judges being the bailies and the sheriff substitute, who preside in alternate months. A Burgh Court is held daily, presided over by justices of the peace for the county of the city of Edinburgh. The Lock-up House is at the back of the Parliament House, and is for the reception of offenders under examination.

The present water supply, under the management of trustees appointed by the corporations of Edinburgh and Leith, comes from the Pentland, Moorfoot and Talla works, where reservoirs have been constructed, from which it is brought by pipes. The supply is constant, that from the Pentlands being entirely of spring water, not needing filtration. There is a large reservoir in the city for the purpose of regulating the constant service. The original water company, incorporated in 1819, was transferred to the Edinburgh and District Water Trust under the "Edinburgh and District Water Act, 1869," and the "Edinburgh and District Works (additional supply) Act, 1874," and the Acts 1876, 1877, 1880 and 1889; Edinburgh and District Water Works (additional supply) Act, 1895; Edinburgh Extension Act, 1896; Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900 and Edinburgh and District Water Works Acts, 1898, 1901, 1904, 1908 and 1914. Under the Act of 1895 the valley of the Talla in Peeblesshire was dammed and the water thus accumulated carried by tunnels and aqueducts to a reservoir at Alnwick hill, near the city; and the pipe service is calculated to carry 24,000,000 gallons daily, while the tunnels are capable of conveying 30,000,000 gallons, the average supply being about 20,000,000 gallons per day, rising in the summer to about 22,500,000 gallons per day.

The lighting of the city is in the hands of the Corporation and is carried out by both gas and electricity; the former is supplied from works managed by the Edinburgh and Leith Corporations Gas Commissioners. The electric lighting, finally decided on in 1893, was commenced at the station and in the streets in May, 1894, and the station was opened for a continuous supply on the 11th of April, 1895.

TRADE.

Edinburgh, independent of Leith, its shipping port, possesses but few manufactures; still there are some departments in which it may justly boast a superiority. Printing and publishing are carried on to a considerable extent, and many valuable works of the age have emanated from the Edinburgh press. The making of paper machinery, type founding, and the manufacture of gas and water meters, iron and wire fencing, india-rubber goods, vulcanite &c. are all branches of importance. Edinburgh ale has long been famous, and there are many extensive breweries in the city.

The Bank of Scotland, established in 1695 by an Act of the Parliament of Scotland, is the oldest banking company in Scotland, and thus naturally assumed the name which it still bears; but it has nothing of that national character which as an institution is possessed by the Bank of England. Next to it in antiquity is the Royal Bank of Scotland, incorporated by royal charter in 1727. The British Linen Bank (formerly the British Linen Company), was incorporated by royal charter in 1746. After this came the Commercial Bank, established in 1810, and the National Bank of Scotland, founded in 1825. The Union Bank of Scotland, established in 1830, and incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1862, is the representative of several banks, one of which was originally a company engaged not only in banking, but in the tobacco trade, and was founded in Edinburgh not very long after the Royal Bank. After it had become a mere banking company, it was long one of the chief banks of Edinburgh, under the name of Sir William Forbes and Co. Having united with a Glasgow bank, it assumed its present name, and it has head offices both in Glasgow and Edinburgh. The Clydesdale Bank Limited, established in 1838 with a head office in Glasgow, has its chief office in Edinburgh, at 29 George Street.

The Union Bank has the greatest authorised note circulation of any bank in Scotland, £454,376. Next to it is the British Linen Bank, £438,024. The authorised circulation of the Commercial Bank is £374,880; that of the Bank of Scotland is £396,852; of the Royal Bank, £216,451; the National Bank, £297,024; and the Clydesdale Bank, about £274,000. The price of stock or shares of all the banks gives proof of their prosperity. The banking business of Glasgow is in great part conducted by the banks having their head offices in Edinburgh, as is also that of all the provincial towns of Scotland. The Scottish banking companies were at one time far more numerous, but the tendency of late has been towards the incorporation of the minor banks with the great banks of Edinburgh and Glasgow.

In fire and life assurances there are many establishments of high standing, having branches in the principal towns of the United Kingdom, and who have commodious business premises in the city. Amongst these may be mentioned the Scottish Widows' Fund, the Life Association of Scotland, the Scottish Provident Institution, the Standard, the Caledonian, the Edinburgh, the Scottish Union and National, the North British and Mercantile and the English and Scottish Law Life Insurance Companies.

Edinburgh possesses various means of communication with all parts of the United Kingdom, by rail, road, sea and inland navigation. There are two terminal stations in the city—that of the North British Company, between Princes street and the Old Town, and that of the Caledonian Company, at the west end of Princes street. The North British, or "Waverley" station, is one of the largest in Great Britain, covering twenty-three acres, one half of which is under roof, having nineteen platforms, those for the main lines being each 560 yards in length. There are eight main lines of railway through the station, and fifty-six dock roads and sidings. From this station lines radiate in all directions, except to the south-west, to which those of the Caledonian Company chiefly extend. Water carriage between Edinburgh and Glasgow is furnished by the Union canal, joining the Forth and Clyde canal near Falkirk, but the traffic on it has much diminished since the opening of railways. The basin of the canal is situated about half a mile south-west of the castle, and is called Port Hopetoun. The sea route is from Leith, and Granton and from the Trinity pier on the Forth.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

The parochial churches of Edinburgh were erected and maintained out of the funds of the burgh; from the same source and from certain port dues at Leith and Port Hopetoun the stipends of the ministers were derived. There were only thirteen parishes within what was the old City Parish of Edinburgh. The ministers of these old city parishes now receive their stipends through the Edinburgh Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in whom is vested the administration of the ecclesiastical revenues of the city. A large number of churches have also been erected and endowed by voluntary subscription, the ministers of which are maintained without burden to city funds. The following are some of the principal churches, including the three cathedrals:—St. Giles, the ancient cathedral of the Carolan diocese of Edinburgh, and now the High Kirk of the Church of Scotland and the official church for all Government ceremonials; the Episcopal Cathedral of St. Mary, the seat of the bishop of the revived see of Edinburgh; and the Roman Catholic Cathedral of St. Mary, the Cathedral church of the Archiepiscopal diocese of St. Andrews and Edinburgh.

The see of Edinburgh was founded by Charles I. on his visit to the city for his coronation at Holyrood in the summer of 1633, and it then consisted of the shires of Edinburgh, Haddington and Linlithgow, and parts of Berwickshire and Stirlingshire; but the diocese now comprises the first three, the shires of Berwick, Peebles, Roxburgh and Selkirk, and parts of Alloa and Stirling. The diocese was abolished in 1689 by the Scottish "Convention of Estates" parliament, but was revived in 1720, when John Fullarton was appointed bishop and administrator, and several of his successors have held the office of Primus.

The ancient cathedral of St. Giles, which occupies an elevated site in the High street and Parliament square, was originally simply the parish church, and a cell to the Abbey of Dunfermline, but during the reign of James III. (1460-88) it was made collegiate, and on the formation of the see of Edinburgh was raised to the rank of a cathedral. There are records of the existence of a church here as early as the 9th century, said to have belonged to the Benedictine priory of Lindisfarne, in Northumbria; Alexander I. in 1120, erected a new church, and a richly carved doorway of this structure existed until 1797, when it was destroyed during the alterations made at that period. The 12th century church was destroyed in 1385, when the city was burnt by an English force under Thomas (Plantagenet), Duke of Gloucester; but a new and much larger structure was at once begun, and of this church much is still extant in the present fabric. The cathedral, as now existing, is in plan exceedingly irregular, and may be described as consisting principally of a choir of five bays, with clerestory and aisles of equal length, transepts, clerestoried nave of five bays with aisles and a central tower; but appendant to the aisles, both of the nave and choir, and clustered about the transepts, are a number of other aisles or chapels, besides several additional structures erected for various purposes in recent years. The oldest portion of the fabric belongs to the church as rebuilt in the 14th century, and comprises the three westernmost bays of the choir, with those parts of the aisles corresponding thereto, the transepts and tower piers, the nave and its aisles, and the incorporated portions of the west front; the whole was vaulted in stone, and the greater part of this work remains, but the vaulting of the nave and south aisle was removed in 1829, and replaced by a plastered ceiling: during the period 1387-1416, five chapels were built on to the south aisle of the nave and two to the north aisle, one by Robert Stewart, Earl of Fife and Menteith, and subsequently Duke of Albany, and the other by William, Earl of Douglas and Mar; the two westernmost of the southern chapels, erected c. 1513, were removed in 1758, and the vaulting and roofs of the others taken down in 1829: the Albany aisle or chapel, on the north side, and St. Eloi's chapel on the west side of the north transept remain, but the latter was altered in 1829 and made to correspond with Chambers' aisle on the east side of the transept; about 1460 the choir was lengthened by two bays, a clerestory added, and the vaulting renewed after a more elaborate design; the easternmost pier of the north arcade, forming part of the new work, was erected as a memorial to James II. of Scotland, who was killed at Roxburgh Castle, 3 Aug. 1460, and its capital is enriched with heraldic shields: at the same time, or rather later, the Preston aisle was added on the south of the choir, as a memorial to William Preston, who bequeathed to the church a relic of the patron saint; this aisle has elegant vaulting, similar to that of the choir, and is now fitted with stalls and a special pew for the royal family; the royal entrance, a spacious porch at the east end of the aisle, was added c. 1883, and incorporates a fine recessed doorway of 1387, originally belonging to a porch, but shifted in 1829: south of the Preston aisle and adjoining the transept is the chapel erected and endowed in 1513 by Walter Chepman, who, in 1507, introduced the art of printing into Scotland, and was here buried in 1532: the Caithness or Moray aisle on the west side of this transept was reduced to its present dimensions in 1829: the tower dates from between 1485 and 1495, and is 30 feet square, the height to the top of the open stonework being 142½ feet, or to the apex of the spirelet 161 feet: it rises two stages above the roof and has a quatrefoiled crested parapet, from within which rise a number of pinnacled buttresses, carrying a series of eight stone ribs converging to a centre and supporting a mass of stone ornamented with canopies and finished with a spirelet and vane: in 1571 the tower was fortified and cannon mounted upon it, and in 1600 was used as a prison. In 1560, on the establishment of Protestantism, the interior was "purged" or dismantled, the altars and everything deemed superstitious removed, and the relics dispersed or sold; but in 1633, on its being made a cathedral, the episcopal form of worship was renewed, and continued until the abolition of the see in 1689: in the 18th century the various portions of the church were partitioned off; the choir was used as the high kirk and the south transept as the old kirk, and two other congregations also worshipped within the building; the nave, at the same time, was constituted an assembly hall, and the north transept became a court house and police office. During the year 1829 a sum of £20,000 was expended in repairs and alterations, under the superintendence of Mr. Burn, architect, some of which were of a purely destructive character; but the real restoration, stimulated by the munificence of Dr. William Chambers, was begun in 1872, under the direction of Messrs. Hay and Henderson, architects, in the course of which all the various partitions were removed, the nave piers renewed, and a new west doorway erected, superseding and incorporating that created by Mr. Burn; the galleries and pews were wholly removed, the piers they concealed or defaced were carefully repaired, and the old fittings and furniture taken away: the work was extended in 1879 to the south side of the church and included the thorough renovation of the Preston, Moray and Chepman aisles: the east window, presented by Sir James Falshaw bart. (Lord Provost 1874-7), and others in the choir are stained: the reredos of stone consists of a series of triangular-headed canopied niches, flanked by and alternating with crocketed pinnacles; below it is a range of seven stalls for the royal chaplains, and fronting these stands the communion table: the pulpit, which stands in the choir, is of Caen stone, exquisitely carved, and was executed by Mr. John Rhind, sculptor, of Edinburgh: the royal sittings in the Preston aisle have been entirely renewed and include a canopied throne for the sovereign, with five stalls on either side, and in front and below is a range of ten stalls for the suite; the throne is of oak, panelled and finely carved and adorned at the back with the royal arms of Scotland and supporters; the canopy, 14 feet in height, is polygonal, elaborately groined and ornamented with pinnacles supporting cusped arches; the desk in front of the throne is also of oak, elaborately wrought and relieved with open tracery, and the whole is raised on a dais, 32 feet long by 8½ feet wide, and 4 feet above the level of the floor: the large window behind the royal pew was in 1896 filled with stained glass, as a commemorative window to those noblemen who had held the office of Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly during the reign of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria: the window consists of ten lights with tracery above and the upper portion has already been filled in with the arms of the respective peers; these at present include John, 2nd Marquess of Bute, who held office in the memorable year of the secession of the Free church, which took place 18 May, 1843; he died 18 March, 1848; Robert, Lord Belhaven and Stenton K.T. d. 22 Dec. 1868; David, 7th Earl of Airlie K.T. (High Commissioner 1872-3), d. 25 Sept. 1881; John, 7th Earl of Aberdeen G.C.M.G., P.C., F.S.A. (High Commissioner 1881-5); John Adrian, 7th Earl of Hopetoun G.C.M.G., P.C. (created Marquis of Linlithgow 1902) (High Commissioner 1887-9) d. 1908; and Gavin, 1st Marquess of Breadalbane K.G., P.C. (High Commissioner 1893-4): these blazons of arms were contributed by the peers themselves or their representatives, save in the case of Lord Belhaven, whose achievement was placed at the cost of the Marquesses of Bute and Breadalbane, the late Sir John Watson, 2nd bart. (d. 1903) of Earnock, and R. K. Inches esq.: the Chepman aisle contains a font of Caen stone, executed by Rhind, after a model by Thorwaldsen, at Copenhagen, and presented by the Very Rev. J. Cameron Lees D.D.: the organ is placed in the south transept: there are aumbries at the east end of both aisles of the choir, and in the wall of the north aisle an arched recess; in the same bay, but on the outside, is a monument to John Napier, Baron of Merchistoun, the inventor of logarithms, d. 3 April, 1617: on the east wall of the Chepman aisle is the splendid monument, erected about 1890, at a cost of £1,000, defrayed chiefly by the clan Graham, to James Graham, 1st Marquess of Montrose, the distinguished Royalist Captain General in Scotland during the Civil war; he was executed at Edinburgh 21 May, 1650, but his remains, buried under the gallows, were here re-interred in state by Charles II. in 1661; the monument, designed in the Renaissance style by Dr. Rowland Anderson, architect, and 16 feet in height by 9 wide, consists of a deeply recessed arch, flanked by advanced columns supporting a frieze and pediment, and enclosing an altar tomb, on which lies a recumbent effigy of the marquess in white marble; the work was executed by Mr. Rhind: at the east end of the Preston aisle is an elegant mural monument in the Jacobean style to the Rt. Hon. John Inglis, of Glencorse, Lord Justice General and Lord President of the Court of Session, d. 20 Aug. 1891, and in the Moray aisle is a monument to James Stewart, Earl of Moray and Regent of Scotland, assassinated at Linlithgow 21 Jan. 1569-70; and a flat pointed recessed arch, enriched with cusps and crocketing, and perhaps once a shrine: in the Albany aisle is another arched recess. The Argyll chapel at the west end formerly belonged to the Guild of Hammermen of the city, and the arms of the Guild still remain in the centre of the floor: on the west side of the chapel is now placed a handsome monument of white and coloured marbles, erected as a memorial to Archibald, 8th Earl and 1st Marquess of Argyll, who was beheaded at the Market cross, near the cathedral, 27 May, 1661: the monument includes a recumbent effigy of the marquess in white alabaster, one hand being placed on the breast, and holding a sword, with a blade of fine steel and a richly gilt handle; two large jasper stones and numerous agates used in the ornamental portions of the work were collected by H.R.H. the Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, during a stay at Oban, and there are also inscriptions. The Chambers' chapel, also on the west, contains a brass to William Chambers, of Glenmoriston LL.D. lord provost of Edinburgh 1865-9; here also are two stained windows, one of which is a memorial to William and Robert Chambers. The new chapel for the Knights of the Thistle was erected in 1911 at the junction of the south aisle of the chancel and the south-east transept; it is 38 feet long by 18 feet wide by 42 feet high, and communicates with the cathedral by two arched openings; the west end of the chapel is square and the east end apsidal; the roof is vaulted in stone, the vault having moulded ribs with carved bosses at the intersections. The cathedral has been the scene of several occurrences of historical interest; here John Knox preached, and in 1572 was buried in the cemetery then adjoining; the spot, now in the road on the south side, is indicated by a plate of metal bearing the initials "J.K."; here also James VI. took leave of his Scottish subjects on his accession to the throne of England, and it was within the cathedral, 23 July, 1637, that Jenny Geddes hurled her stool at the dean, on his attempting to read the English liturgy: Charles I. frequently attended service here, and in 1822 George IV. on his visit to the city, Aug. 25, occupied the royal pew: the cathedral is somewhat over 190 feet in length, the width being through the transepts about 125 feet; the external appearance, owing largely to the squat pinnacles and low roofs, is heavy and sombre, and is only relieved by the open work of the spire.

New and Old Greyfriars Churches.—The Old Greyfriars Church, which is situated not far from the Grassmarket, was founded in the year 1612, on the site of a monastery of the Franciscans or Greyfriars: in 1650 the interior of the church was burned by Cromwell's soldiers, and on 7th May, 1718, the spire, which was used as a powder magazine, was unfortunately destroyed by an explosion. New Greyfriars Church was built by the magistrates at the western end of the old one in 1721, at an expense of £3,045. The original or Old church was burnt in 1845, in consequence of the overheating of a flue, and rebuilt in the same style as the annexed New Greyfriars church. It was in Old Greyfriars church, and in the churchyard adjacent, that the National Covenant was signed in 1638.

The Tron Church, so called from a tron or weighing machine which at one time stood near it, is situated in the High street, at the corner of South Bridge street. An inscription on the doorway states that it was formerly called Christ Church, and consecrated in 1647. The original steeple was destroyed by fire in 1824, and the present ornamental one was erected in 1828. The front towards the High street consists of a lofty tower and octagonal steeple flanked by two flatheaded doorways, surmounted by windows in the Decorated style, and in the base of the tower a centre doorway with buttresses marking the tower angles, there being also four more buttresses, two on each side, beyond the windows.

Lady Yester's Church, in Infirmary street, was originally founded in 1647, principally by Margaret Kerr, Lady Yester, but it was taken down in 1803, and the present elegant Gothic building was erected on its site.

Canongate Church, the church of the parish of that name, is a Gothic building in the form of a cross founded in 1688, and built at an expense of £2,400, from a legacy left by Thomas Moodie, a citizen of Edinburgh. Many notable persons are buried in the churchyard—Adam Smith, Dugald Stewart, and Ferguson, the poet, among the number.

St. Cuthbert's Parish Church, or the West Kirk, situated near the base of the rock on which the castle stands, was built in 1775, and is the mother church of the extensive parish of St. Cuthbert. It was taken down and the present church on the same site was erected in 1892-3, and opened in 1894. It is in the Renaissance style with two square towers at the east end: the old tower at the west end, built in 1755, still remains. There are several stained windows, presented by the ministers and members of the congregation, and a bronze lectern, with the figure of an angel, presented in 1895 by the late Mr. Alex. Ballantine. The church will seat 2,400 persons. The burial ground is spacious, and many of the monuments are costly. Here was interred Thomas de Quincey, who died at Edinburgh 8 Dec. 1859. St. Cuthbert's hall, adjoining the church, was built in 1894, on the site of the old manse; it contains a large hall for 800 persons, and is used as a Sunday school, and let for concerts and bazaars. In connection with the hall is the St. Cuthbert's Young Men's Christian Association, which possess a library of over 1,600 volumes.

St. Andrew's Church, standing on the north side of George street, in the New Town, has a tower with a fine tapering spire, 168 feet high and containing a chime of 8 bells. The church, built on an oval plan, has an historical celebrity, as the scene of the disruption of the Church of Scotland, which took place at the meeting of the General Assembly on the 18th May, 1843. It contains a fine organ and was renovated about 1906.

St. George's Church, on the west side of Charlotte square, and erected in 1814, at a cost of £33,000, is an edifice in the Italian style, by Reid, and has a dome and projecting wings, between which is a portico with four Doric columns.

St. Mary's Church, in Bellevue crescent, erected in 1824, at a cost of £14,000, has a Corinthian portico and an elegant spire 186 feet high. The church will seat 1,500 persons.

St. Stephen's Church, in St. Vincent street, erected in 1828, at a cost of £25,000, is octagonal in plan, with a tower 163 feet high, and will seat 1,600 persons.

Trinity College Church, on the south side of Jeffrey street, was built in 1871-2, in the Norman Transitional style, after designs by Lessells. It has a tower and spire 115 feet high, and north of it is a Gothic church which is a reconstruction of the old Holy Trinity church at the foot of Leith wynd, founded in 1462 by Mary of Gueldres, which, having to be taken down to enlarge the railway station, was re-erected on this site.

St. John's, Victoria street, was built in 1819 by the Town Council at the instance of the Rev. Thomas Chalmers, who subsequently organized the Free Church movement.

The Assembly Hall of the Established Church, also called the Victoria Hall or Victoria Church, was built in 1844, at a cost of £16,000, and is an oblong structure in the Decorated style, consisting of 5 bays with an eastern tower, the upper stages of which are octagonal and finished by a lofty and extremely beautiful spire. It occupies a commanding situation on the Castle Hill, fronting the Lawnmarket, and is the place of meeting of the General Assembly.

Scottish Episcopal Church.

This community possesses many places of worship in Edinburgh, several of which are very fine buildings. The service is conducted after the ritual of the Church of England. Scotland is divided by this body into seven dioceses, over which preside the same number of bishops. The clergy are mainly supported from the produce of the pew rents.

St. Mary's Cathedral, Manor place, the seat of the Bishop of Edinburgh, is a building of stone in the Early English style, designed by the late Sir Gilbert Scott. The plan consists of a chancel of four bays, with north and south aisles, transepts with eastern and western aisles, and nave, with north and south aisles terminating in towers, at present incomplete, at the west end: the central tower and spire are 290 feet in height, and contain 10 bells: adjoining the north aisle of the chancel is a fine Chapter-house. Excepting the great rose windows in the nave and the transept gables, the windows are all of lancet form, and the general character of the building is simple and massive, though rich in detail: the chief portal at the west end of the nave and that in the south transept are very elaborately treated. Internally the length is 278 feet, and the breadth (taken across the nave and aisles) 76 feet, and the aisles throughout, as well as the central crossing and choir, are vaulted in stone and concrete. The vaulting at the east end of the choir springs (as in an apse) from between the three equal lancets of the great west window. The nave and transepts are vaulted in oak with richly moulded ribs and carved bosses; and in these parts of the church the triforium is open, but in the choir it is closed. The choir is continued to the western piers of the central tower, and divided from the nave by a low screen of marble and mosaic. The south-east choir aisle is fitted up as a side chapel, and contains an altar, of Romanesque design, in Belgian marble. The reredos is of alabaster, containing a marble group (by Miss Grant), representing the Crucifixion. The font (under the south-west tower) is of alabaster. The organ, of four manuals, stands in the north transept, and is played from an electric console in the choir. There are a number of stained memorial windows. The whole building is supplied with electric light, and will seat 2,000 persons, about three-fourths of the seats being free. The funds for the erection of the Cathedral were derived from a bequest of two ladies, the late Misses Walker, of Coates. The foundation stone was laid by the late Duke of Buccleuch, on the 21st of May, 1874, and the opening ceremonial took place in October, 1879. The cost of the building, so far as it has gone, is stated to be £120,000. The establishment consists of a provost, a vice-provost, five canons, one of whom is chancellor, and three chaplains; the bishop appoints the provost, vice-provost, and one canon, the clergy of the diocese appoint two others and the remaining two stalls are held ex-officio by the Synod Clerk and the principal of the Theological College; the provost and vice-provost, with the consent of the Chapter, appoint the chaplains.

All Saints, Brougham street, erected in 1867, is a building in the Gothic style of the 13th century, and consists of apsidal chancel, clerestoried nave with one aisle, and narthex of two storeys, the lower serving as a vestibule, the upper opening into the nave after the manner of a triforium, and used as a chapel, transepts, and a bell turret. The altar-piece, designed by Burgess, and representing the "Annunciation," has been removed to a side chapel and a new reredos erected: the church will seat 600. Patrons, the Vestry.

Christ Church, Morningside, built in 1876, is in the French Gothic style of the 13th century, and has a wide nave with walls internally low, and quasi transepts. The roofs are open to the ridge, and, in common with the interior, are rather profusely decorated; there is a tower with spire at the north-east angle, serving as entrance and organ chamber, and a narrow and lofty chancel, ending in a polygonal apse, with processional aisle. The chancel roof is groined in wood the walls adorned with rich diapering carved in the stone, and elsewhere relieved with colour, while a series of fine designs in stained glass fill the clerestory windows of the apse and the windows in the body of the church: under the nave there is a large hall used for congregational purposes.

St. John the Evangelist's, at the west end of Princes street, built in 1818 at a cost of £1,600, and since enlarged at a cost of £14,000, is in the Perpendicular Gothic style, and has apsidal chancel, nave with aisles and a western tower: the windows are all stained. The interior is rich in carved oak work, and has a fine oak screen, erected in 1913.

Old St. Paul's, in Jeffrey street, used as an Episcopal chapel in 1688, and once the only Episcopal church within the ancient city walls, has been taken down: the present church, erected on the same site, was opened by the Bishop of Edinburgh 27 Jan. 1883 and was completed in 1905. The church, which is in the Gothic style, contains a chapel erected in memory of Samuel Seabury, first Bishop of the Episcopal church in America and who was at one time a member of the congregation; there are 800 sittings.

St. Paul's, in York place, built in 1818 at a cost of £12,000, and restored in 1891, is also Gothic, with four octagonal towers at its angles, and has a chancel, added in 1891, and eight stained windows. In one of its four turrets hangs a bell formerly at the Chapel Royal of Holyrood, and it is seated for 800.

St. Peter's, in Lutton place, Newington, built in 1859, is in the Early Decorated style, and consists of apsidal chancel with aisles, nave with aisles, narthex porch, a detached octagonal baptistery, and a tower with spire. It is seated for 500.

St. Thomas's, in Rutland place, built in 1843 and enlarged in 1882, is in the Norman style, and will seat 700.

Holy Trinity, Dean bridge, is a fine building, erected in 1838, and affords 590 sittings.

St. Columba's, in Johnston terrace, built in 1846, is in the Early English style, and consists of chancel, with a sacristy on the south side, nave, and a gallery at the west end extending over the porch and vestry. A large portion of the materials of which the walls are built was taken from the ruins of the chapel in the palace of Queen Mary of Guise, on Castle hill: it is seated for 300.

St. Andrew's, in Holyrood road, built in 1857, and enlarged in 1874, is an edifice in the Norman style. Further improvements were made, and a memorial window to David Anderson, of Moredun, placed in the chancel in 1884: the church affords 550 sittings.

There are also the churches of Christ Church, Trinity road, St. George's, York place, St. James, Inverleith row, St. Martin, Tynecastle, Gorgie road, St. Vincent, St. Stephen street, besides a number of mission stations

United Free Church of Scotland,

Formed by the amalgamation, 31 Oct. 1900, of the Free Church of Scotland, founded in 1843, and the United Presbyterian Church. The meetings of its General Assembly are held in Edinburgh annually, at the same time with that of the Established Church. These meetings take place in a hall erected for the purpose in 1858-9, and enlarged about 1903, and now capable of holding 2,000 persons.

The United Free Church has also theological seminaries in Glasgow and Aberdeen, and about 100 places of worship in Edinburgh, some of which are St. George's, Shandwick place, St. Mary's, at the corner of Albany street and Broughton street, Barclay Church in Bruntsfield links, St. John's, near the Victoria Hall, New North Church, near the Greyfriars churches, Broughton place, Palmerston place and North Morningside.

The Chalmers' Memorial Church, Grange road, was erected in memory of the celebrated Rev. Thomas Chalmers LL.D. who in 1815 was minister of the Tron church and afterwards of St. John's, Victoria street, which the Town Council built for him. In 1843 he was a chief organizer of the Free Church body, became the first moderator of their assembly, and when he died, 31 May, 1847, was principal of the Free Church College.

The Guthrie Memorial Church, Easter road, was erected in 1881, to commemorate the work of the Rev. Thomas Guthrie D.D. originally minister of the Old Greyfriars' Church, and subsequently of St. John's parish church. He was an eminent leader of the Free Church movement, and after the Disruption in 1843, became minister of Free St. John's, from which he retired in 1864; he was likewise the promoter of the Ragged School system, and died February 24th, 1873: a stone font supported on clustered columns was presented in October, 1895.

Nicolson Street Church, on the west side of the street of that name, is an edifice in the Gothic style. Dr. John Jamieson, a native of Glasgow and the compiler of the "Scottish Etymological Dictionary," was for many years the minister of this church, and died 12 July, 1838.

Broughton Place Church is a massive building, with a portico and Doric columns, and will seat 1,600 persons.

Newington South Church is in Causeway side.

Roman Catholic.

The province of St. Andrews and Edinburgh consists of the archiepiscopal see of St. Andrews and Edinburgh and the four suffragan sees of Aberdeen, Argyll and the Isles, Dunkeld and Galloway. The archdiocese of St. Andrews and Edinburgh comprises the counties of Edinburgh, Berwick, southern parts of Fife (bounded by the Eden), Haddington, Linlithgow, Peebles, Roxburghshire, Selkirk and Stirling (except Baldernock).

St. Mary's Cathedral, which occupies a site near York place, in Broughton street, is a handsome stone edifice in the Gothic style, built by subscription in 1813, and costing £8,000. It has a very fine organ; and above the altar is an excellent painting attributed to Vandyke and representing the "Descent from the Cross." The building consists of a chancel of three bays, with apse and north and south aisles, side chapel, baptistery, and porch: the archiepiscopal throne and canons' stalls are of carved oak. The dedication took place on the 30th November, 1895.

St. Patrick's Church is in Cowgate: and a larger one, called the Church of the Sacred Heart, a fine building, lighted by cupolas, is situated in Lauriston street.

Baptists, Congregationalists, &c.

There are five Baptist and seven Congregationalist chapels, but the only one possessing any external beauty is Augustine Chapel, on George IV. bridge.

The Catholic Apostolic Church, Mansfield place, was opened in 1876 at a cost of about £35,000, and is an edifice in the Late Norman style, comprising nave, chancel, western tower, and a baptistery.

The church of The First Church of Christian Science, in Inverleith terrace, was erected in 1911 at a cost of £11,300. The church is a building of two storeys, the lower storey containing a hall to seat 150 persons, and eight class rooms. The church has 600 sittings.

For full list of places of worship with their clergy see p. 373.

CEMETERIES.

There are five cemeteries: The Grange, on the south; Dalry, on the west; Dean, on the north-west; Warriston, on the north; and Rosebank, on the north-east. In the Dean cemetery is a runic cross marking the grave of Professor Blackie, d. 1895.

The Roman Catholic cemetery is at Liberton, and was provided in May, 1896.

In Greyfriars' churchyard were interred, among many other eminent persons, George Buchanan, d. 5 Dec. 1582; Sir George Mackenzie, d. 2 May, 1691; Alexander Henderson (the leader of the Scottish Presbyterians in 1638 and following years), d. 19 Aug. 1646; Colin Maclaurin F.R.S. d. 14 June, 1746; Allan Ramsay, d. 7 Jan. 1758; Robert Adam, the architect, d. 3 Mar. 1792; William Robertson D.D. the historian, d. 11 June, 1793; and Robert Blair, a Scotch divine, whose sermons were once so popular, d. 4 Feb. 1747. In this churchyard many Covenanters, chiefly from the west of Scotland, were kept prisoners for some time in 1679, with no lodging but the bare ground and no shelter from the weather. Some were set free, others were banished as slaves to the plantations.

EDUCATIONAL.

For the University of Edinburgh see page xix.

The Royal High School of Edinburgh is on Calton hill, and the date of its foundation is unknown, but it appears to have existed as early as the beginning of the twelfth century. From that time to the Reformation, "the Grammar School of Edinburgh," as it was then called, was under the control of the canons of Holyrood. In 1598 it was remodelled on a more comprehensive plan, and from the patronage vouchsafed to it by James VI., it received the name of Schola Regia Edinburgensis. Although at first a classical seminary, it now furnishes systematic instruction in all the departments of a commercial as well as a liberal education. There is a library containing nearly 7,000 volumes to which all the pupils have access, and also a special lending library of books suitable for boys, and the school is equipped with chemical and physical laboratories and workshops. The school buildings were originally in the Old Town, and were rebuilt on nearly the same spot in 1777: the present structure was erected in 1825-9, on the south slope of the Calton hill, at a cost of £30,000, from designs by the late Thomas Hamilton, architect. The main building, 270 feet in length, has a magnificent hexastyle Doric portico in the centre, which is united to the wings by two corridors, the entablatures of which are supported by twelve columns, also of the Doric order. The interior comprises a suite of rooms for the preparatory school, chemical laboratory and lecture room, gymnasium, swimming bath, drawing school and rector's and other class rooms. Workshops for wood and iron have also been added, as well as a dining room. The playground extends over nearly two acres, and commands a picturesque view of the ancient city and surrounding country, and there is also a covered playground. There are now (1915) 470 boys; attached to the school are 13 entrance scholarships of £20, and 9 leaving scholarships of £30 each. The honorary patrons are the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Council of the City, and the school, which is under the inspection of the Scotch Education Department, is managed by the Edinburgh School Board. John Strong M.A., F.R.S.E. rector.

The Edinburgh Academy, Henderson row, established in 1824, and incorporated by royal charter from George IV. is a proprietary school, controlled by a body of 15 directors, three of whom are elected annually from the body of shareholders; there are two departments, a preparatory and upper school. The former, opened for the first time in October, 1888, takes boys from six to nine or ten; and the latter continue their education till eighteen or nineteen. The course prepares boys for the universities in England and Scotland, for business life, for Sandhurst, Woolwich, for the Indian Civil Service and the public services generally, and for the First Scottish Actuarial Examination. The school buildings include a gymnasium, scientific laboratory and lecture room, a library, workshop, miniature rifle range and two fives courts. Besides a playground of three acres, there are two cricket grounds, each of nine acres, within a short distance of the school, for the exclusive use of present and former pupils. There are now (1915) 560 boys, including 80 boarders. R. H. Ferard M.A. rector; F. C. Thomson, sec. to the directors.

The United Free Church Theological College (New College), founded in 1843, stands at the head of the Mound, and is in a weak style of Gothic, from designs by Mr. Playfair.

The buildings form a quadrangle, 84 by 56 feet, with two towers, 121 feet in height, flanking the principal entrance, and a similar tower at the north-east corner 95 feet in height In 1896, a statue of John Knox, the reformer (1505-72), was placed in the quadrangle of the college. The library was founded in 1843, and removed to the present building in 1850. It contains about 50,000 volumes, mainly theological.

The Theological College of the Scottish Episcopal Church, Coates hall, Rosebery crescent, had its origin in the pious benefaction of Catherine Panton, residing near Fraserburgh, in the county of Aberdeen, which was entrusted in the year 1810 to the bishops of the Scottish Church, for the purpose of "erecting and endowing a seminary of learning, or theological institution, for the education of young men desirous to serve in the sacred ministry of the Scottish Episcopal Communion."

The Merchant Company Education Board.—This Board is constituted under the Edinburgh Merchant Company Endowments Order 1909, which, inter alia, effected the amalgamation of the educational endowments in connection with the Company, viz., the Merchant Maiden Hospital, George Watson's Hospital, Daniel Stewart's College and James Gillespie's School.

The Merchant Trades Maiden Hospital was founded in 1695 by the Company and Mary Erskine, widow of James Hair, druggist in Edinburgh, for the maintenance and education of girls possessing certain qualifications.

George Watson's Hospital owes its origin to George Watson, who was born at Edinburgh about the year 1650, served an apprenticeship to a merchant in the city, and, after a short residence in Holland, entered into the service of Sir James Dick, a wealthy trader in Edinburgh. This employment he relinquished in 1695, on being appointed accountant to the Bank of Scotland. He died in 1723. By his will he bequeathed £12,000 to endow a hospital for the maintenance and instruction of boys of certain privileged classes.

Daniel Stewart's College.—Daniel Stewart, of the Exchequer, who died in 1814, left the residue of his property to be accumulated for the purpose of building and endowing a hospital for the maintenance of boys. The amount of the residue (after the erection and endowment of a free school in the founder's native parish of Logierait, Perthshire) was upwards of £13,000. The college is one of the secondary schools of Scotland, and is administered by the Edinburgh Merchant Company Education Board.

Foundationers.—As soon as the governing bodies of the three hospitals above mentioned obtained possession of the necessary funds, they proceeded to erect buildings (hospitals) for the reception of the girls and boys (foundationers) to be maintained and educated, and the buildings continued to be used for that purpose till 1870. In that year the governing bodies, taking advantage of the powers conferred by the "Endowed Institutions (Scotland) Act," applied for provisional orders, which empowered them to convert the three hospitals into day schools, and as such the buildings were opened in September, 1870. Since then the foundationers, in addition to free education at the schools, have received an annual allowance towards maintenance, and have been boarded in their own homes or with other families approved by the governing bodies. Before they can be elected, applicants for foundations must have the following qualifications:—

Foundationers of the Merchant Trades Maiden Hospital (20).—They must be (1) daughters or granddaughters of members of the Merchant Company; or (2) daughters or granddaughters of ministers of the Church of Scotland, members of the Presbytery of Edinburgh, with a charge in the said city or the town of Leith; or, (3) daughters or granddaughters of governors of the Merchant Maiden Hospital; or, (4) daughters or granddaughters of burgesses and guild brethren of the city of Edinburgh not admitted members of the Merchant Company, but admitted burgesses and guild brethren of the said city prior to 1st January, 1881. Classes (1), (2) and (3) are prefered to class (4). Foundationers must not be under nine nor above sixteen years of age as at 1st October of the year of election or presentation. Certain private patrons who have the right to present girls to the foundation are not restricted to the above privileged classes.

Foundationers of George Watson's Hospital (45).—They must be (1) sons or grandsons of members of the Merchant Company; or, (2) sons or grandsons of ministers of the Old Church, Edinburgh, quoad sacra; or, (3) sons or grandsons of burgesses and guild brethren of the city of Edinburgh not admitted members of the Merchant Company, but admitted burgesses and guild brethren of the said city prior to 1st January, 1881. Classes (1) and (2) are preferred to class (3). Foundationers must not be under nine nor above fourteen years of age as at 1st October of the year of election.

Foundationers of Daniel Stewart's College (20).—They must be boys resident in the city of Edinburgh or the town of Leith, the sons of honest, industrious and well-behaved parents whose circumstances in life do not enable them suitably to support and educate their children at other schools. Foundationers must not be under nine nor above fourteen years of age as at 1st October of the year of election.

All the foundationers of each hospital must pass an educational and a medical examination at entrance.

The elections take place in June, and forms of application may be obtained from the Chamberlain, at the Merchants' Hall, on and after the 1st April preceding.

Schools.—In addition to the three hospitals which were converted into day schools in 1870, another school was opened in 1871 in virtue of power obtained in one of the provisional orders. The four schools, now managed by the Education Board, are recognised by the Scotch Education Department under the regulations for secondary schools. The courses of study are so framed as to provide a liberal education in preparation for commercial or professional life, the civil service, the universities, etc., and also, in the case of the girls, to enable them to discharge efficiently the duties of home life. Courses in domestic science are intended to be provided soon at the girls' schools, where, it may be mentioned, pianoforte music and dancing are included in the ordinary curriculum. Within the past few years a large expenditure has been made in providing chemical and physical laboratories and art rooms with modern appliances. Religious instruction is given in all the classes. The fees are moderate.

The Education Board may award, as a result of competitive examination or otherwise, to pupils who have been in attendance at any of the schools for the requisite time, the following benefits tenable for such period as the Board may fix, viz., school attendance scholarships conferring the right of free education; (2) school bursaries, yielding free education and a money allowance; and (3) higher bursaries not exceeding £100, for further advancement in education or practical training in universities, technical or other colleges, schools of art or music or cookery and domestic economy or otherwise in this country or abroad.

The Schools are as follows:—

(1) Edinburgh Ladies' College, Queen street (with branch at 16 Atholl crescent); head mistress, Miss Mary G. Clarke M.A.; lady superintendent, Miss Elizabeth Reid M.A.

(2) George Watson's College for Boys, The Meadows and Lauriston place; head master, John Alison M.A., F.R.S.E.

(3) George Watson's Ladies' College, George square; head mistress, Charlotte E. Ainslie B.A.Lond.

(4) Daniel Stewart's College for Boys, Queensferry road and Ravelston terrace; head master, C. H. Milne M.A., F.R.S.E.

(5) James Gillespie's Higher Grade Schools, Warrender Park crescent, were founded by James Gillespie, of Spylaw, merchant and tobacconist in Edinburgh, who, by his will, dated in the year 1796, bequeathed the greater part of his property for the endowment of a charitable school, and of an hospital for aliment and maintenance of old men and women. The buildings, designed by Mr. Burn, were erected in 1801-2, and up to 1870 the hospital continued to be occupied by old persons, of whom about forty were maintained in it, but in that year the hospital was converted into elementary day schools. The governors could grant forty school bursaries at the end of each session, and establish twelve higher school bursaries of a value not exceeding £10 each yearly, tenable for a period not exceeding three years, so as to enable pupils to attend at the higher class schools of the Company. Those entitled to the benefits of the hospital as aged foundationers are persons not under 55 years of age, first, of the name of Gillespie, whatever part of Scotland they may come from; and, second, persons belonging to Edinburgh and its suburbs; failing these, persons from Leith, Newhaven, and other parts of Midlothian; whom failing, persons from any other part of Scotland. By the provisional order of 1870 the governors had power, instead of maintaining the foundationers in any building, to allow them a pension of not less than £10 and not exceeding £25 a year. The governors of the schools previous to 1908 were the master, treasurer and assistants of the Merchant Company, the ministers of St. Stephen's and Tolbooth Churches, and five representatives of the Town Council, but the schools are now under the management of the Edinburgh School Board.

The Royal (Dick) Veterinary College, Clyde street, was founded by the late Professor Dick in 1823; it was affiliated to the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons in 1844 and incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1906. Professor Dick died in 1866.

George Heriot's Trust.—George Heriot, who came of an old East Lothian family, the Heriots of Traboun, was born at Edinburgh about the year 1563. He followed his father's trade of a goldsmith, and in 1597 was appointed goldsmith to Anne of Denmark, the queen of James VI. Shortly afterwards he was nominated jeweller and goldsmith to the king: and when the Court was removed to London, in 1603, Heriot followed in its train. During his residence in London he lost both his wives and all his children, and he himself died there February 12, 1624, having, by a will dated in the previous year, bequeathed the residue of his property, amounting to £23,625, for the erection of an hospital, "for the mainetenance, releife, bringing upp, and education of poore fatherlesse boyes, freemen's sonnes of the towne of Edinburgh." The foundation stone of George Heriot's Hospital, Lauriston, was laid July 1, 1628, but, owing to the civil war and other causes, the building was not opened till April 11, 1659, the expense of the erection exceeding £30,000. The fabric surrounds a quadrangle and is in commingled styles of Gothic and Renaissance: with some specially Scottish features, at each angle is a large square tower of four storeys, with ornamented parapets and corbelled-out turrets, and in the centre on two sides smaller but loftier towers of five storeys, with polygonal lanterns and cupola: the whole stands on a balustraded terrace with broad flights of steps. The original trustees of Heriot's endowment were the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council, and the city ministers of Edinburgh; and by them and their successors in office the trust continued to be administered till August, 1885. At that date the Endowed Schools (Scotland) Commissioners issued a scheme by which the governing body was reconstituted, and the number of its members reduced from fifty-four to twenty-one, of whom twelve are appointed by the Town Council (one of these must be elected from among the ministers of religion officiating in Edinburgh, not being members of the Established Church of Scotland), three by the School Board of Edinburgh, two by the city ministers of Edinburgh, two by the Senatus of the University of Edinburgh, one by the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and one by the Edinburgh Chamber of Commerce. Chairman, the Lord Provost. The income of the trust is now devoted to—(1) The maintenance of a day school within the buildings of Heriot's Hospital, called George Heriot's School, and open to fee-paying pupils. (2) The maintenance and extension of the Watt Institution as a Technical College—known as the Heriot-Watt College—for "providing technical and general education for the industrial classes, of both sexes, on a scale suitable to the great and increasing wants of these classes." (3) The foundation of bursaries for the promotion of secondary and higher education, which are tenable at George Heriot's School, the High School, the Heriot-Watt College, St. George's Training College, and the University. There are now (1915) nearly 1,200 boys. Attached to the school are 150 Foundations of £20 each, 70 Free Scholarships; 30 Bursaries of £10; 20 University Bursaries of £30 for 4 years and 1 Travelling Scholarship of £75 for 2 years. J. B. Clark M.A., F.R.S.E. head master.

Heriot-Watt College, Chambers street, is mainly intended to give a thorough scientific, technical, artistic and commercial course of instruction, at moderate fees, to students in attendance at evening classes. Day classes are held for the higher training of engineers and chemists and a school of printing, and there is also a department of technical mycology. Attached to the College are various bursaries covering the cost of education and books or assisting students to carry on their education in the day technical department, or in the University of Edinburgh. There are at present nearly 3,200 male and female students.

The Fettes College and Endowment are due to the bequest of Sir William Fettes bart. of Comely Bank, who was born in 1750, and died in 1836. The buildings, which stand to the north of the new town, form a picturesque pile in a highly ornate style, designed by the late Mr. David Bryce, and include a chapel in an elaborate form of Decorated Gothic. The administration of the endowment is now in the hands of the governors of the Fettes Trust, acting under the scheme of the Educational Endowments (Scotland) Commission, dated April 3rd, 1886. There are at present fifty foundationers. There are also foundation scholarships, restricted to boys who have been pupils for at least three years in public or state-aided schools in Scotland, or in any schools subject to Government inspection under the provisions of the Educational Endowments (Scotland) Act, 1882. The scholars are maintained and educated free of charge, and in addition receive the sum of £20 yearly. As a rule, two are offered annually for competition, but this depends upon the vacancies that occur. Non-foundationers are also received, and for their accommodation there are four boarding-houses, situated within the college grounds, and under the charge of the college masters. The instruction includes all the branches of a liberal education of the highest class, and is intended to qualify for the universities, the civil service and the various professions.

The Edinburgh School Board has offices in Castle terrace and Cornwall street, designed by Mr. Robert Wilson, architect to the Board, the estimated cost being about £10,000.

Merchiston Castle School, in Colinton road, was opened as a private boarding school in 1833. It is now the property of a company, consisting mainly of old pupils, the directors of the company forming the governing body of the school. The school buildings, boarding houses, class rooms, sanatorium, workshop, gymnasium &c. stand in and around the grounds of the castle. The old tower dates probably from the middle of the 15th century, but the other school buildings are modern. The school consists of two departments, the preparatory and the big school. The former, opened in 1892, takes boys from eight to thirteen years of age, and the latter, consisting of boys from thirteen to nineteen, follows the usual lines of a public school curriculum. Near the school is a playing field, about 14 acres in extent. There are a few entrance scholarships, and three leaving scholarships (called the "Roberson Memorial") worth about £45 annually, one of which is offered each year for competition among boys who are going to the University. There are now (1915) 260 boys, including 160 boarders. Attached to the school are two entrance scholarships of £20 each and one leaving scholarship of £45 for three years annually. Cecil Stagg M.A. head master.

The Teachers' Training College, in Holyrood road, was erected in 1913 at a cost of about £55,000; the college is one of the four training centres established in connection with the Scottish Universities.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The Mint of Scotland.—In the lane called Gray's close stand the buildings formerly occupied by the Mint of Scotland. They were erected in 1574, but no money has been coined there since the union of the two kingdoms.

The Parliament House, erected 1640, to take the place of the old Parliament Hall in the Castle and the Tolbooth which had been used for the meetings of Parliament from 1560, occupies the south and west sides of Parliament square, formerly known as Parliament close, on the south side of High street, and behind St. Giles's Cathedral. The present front is in the Italian style, by Reid, and has a rusticated ground storey, the upper storey being relieved by columns in the centre and at the wings. The building was remodelled to serve as the Law Courts. The hall, formerly used for meeting of Parliament, is 122 feet in length and 40 in breadth, the ceiling being of massive carved oak, and the floor also of oak: it forms a handsome promenade, in which advocates meet daily during session to transact business and attend cases pending before the supreme courts. The subject of the stained window on the south side of the hall is the inauguration of the Court, in 1532, by James V., who is in the act of presenting the deed of confirmation, by Pope Clement VII., to the Lord President. The other figures represent Dunbar, Archbishop of Glasgow, the Abbot of Cambuskenneth, and judges and nobles of the time: this window was executed at Munich, in 1868, from a design by Kaulbach, and cost £2,000. The hall is ornamented with statues and portraits of distinguished lawyers, more or less connected with Scotland. Of the former, the principal are those of Lord President Forbes, in his judicial robes; Viscount Melville, Dundas of Arniston, Blair of Avonton, Francis Jeffrey, Boyle, and Cockburn. Among the portraits are: Lord Brougham, by Sir Daniel Macnee; Lords President M'Neill and Hope; John, Duke of Argyll; Lord President Lockhart, of Carnwath; and other distinguished leading functionaries. Within this hall was held the great banquet given by the corporation of the city to George IV., on his visit to Scotland in 1822. The Outer House, where the Lords Ordinary sit, consists of four courts, where civil cases are tried for the first time; extensive alterations were made in 1907 at a cost of about £27,000 when the four small courts were replaced by four new ones two of which have jury boxes. The Inner House is divided into two divisions (first and second), where appeals are heard from the Outer House and Sheriff Courts. The High Court of Justiciary is the supreme criminal tribunal of Scotland, and is situated in another part of the building. The Advocates' Library, the Writers' to the Signet Library, and the Library of the Solicitors before the Supreme Courts, occupy rooms in the main building; the first named was founded in 1682 and is entitled to a copy of every book published in Great Britain. In the centre of Parliament square is an equestrian statue of Charles II.; the figure, which is in Roman costume, was erected in 1685.

The County Rooms for the Midlothian County Council, Constabulary &c. at the corner of the High street and of George IV. bridge, were completed in 1903, and are in the Italian style; the west front is adorned with allegorical sculpture.

The Sheriff Court House, George IV. bridge, erected in 1868, is an edifice in the Renaissance style, and contains criminal and civil courts for the city and county, chambers for the sheriffs, procurator fiscal, sheriff clerk and the auditor of the Court of Session. The Society of Procurators of Midlothian also has rooms here.

The Municipal Buildings, formerly known as the Royal Exchange, in High street, were founded in 1753 and completed in 1761, at a cost of upwards of £31,000. They are built round a quadrangle and contain the City Council Chambers, the Magistrates' Court Room and a number of municipal offices and a museum, containing a valuable and interesting collection relating to the City of Edinburgh and Scotland generally, as well as a valuable collection of relics of the poet, Robert Burns. A tablet placed by the corporation in 1894 at the entrance of the building has the following inscription :—" On this site stood the Mansion of Sir Simon Preston, of Craigmillar, provost of the City of Edinburgh, 1556-7, in which mansion Mary, Queen of Scotland, after her surrender to the confederate lords at Carberry hill, spent her last night in Edinburgh, 15th June, 1567. On the following evening she was conveyed to Holyrood, and thereafter to Lochleven Castle as a State prisoner." On the west side of the building, in Warriston's close, another tablet has been placed to indicate the site of the manse occupied by John Knox 1560-66. The Municipal insignia include a mace and a state sword. The former, made in Edinburgh in 1617, is of silver-gilt and 3ft. 2in. long ; the shaft is baluster shaped and divided into three portions by a vase-shaped knop in the centre and two round bulging knops, all of which are enriched with embossing, and the spreading base is similarly treated ; four small scrolled brackets support the head, which bears four circles, two enclosing a crowned thistle between the letters I. R. and the other two a castle ; above is a fillet studded with national badges, and over this an interlaced cresting of crosses and fleurs-de-lis, from which spring narrow arches forming the crown and carrying an orb and cross ; on the flat top of the head are the royal arms of James VI. The sword, presented to the city, 3 March, 1627, by King Charles I. is 4ft. 1¼in. long and has a two-edged blade : the grip is elaborately chased with various national emblems, and the guard, the ends of which are turned reversely to each other, terminate in grotesque heads ; the pommel is round and flat and bears two female figures, symbolical of Fame and Glory : the scabbard is of wood covered with crimson velvet and clasped with seven silver-gilt mounts chased with scroll and other ornament.

The General Post and Telegraph Office, erected on the site of the Old Theatre Royal, in Waterloo Place, at the east end of Princes street, is a large building in the Italian style, completed in May, 1866, at a cost of about £120,000. The foundation stone was laid by H.R.H. the Prince Consort in 1861.

The Inland Revenue Office occupies a spacious building in Waterloo place.

His Majesty's Prison, on the south side of the Calton hill, originally designed by the celebrated Mr. Adam, and erected in 1791, were modified or extended in 1817, 1846 and 1882 ; further alterations have since been completed, and the prison now contains about 450 cells.

The memorial stone of the new Freemasons' Hall erected at a cost of £40,000, was laid on April 28th, 1911, by the Marquess of Tullibardine, Grand Master Mason of Scotland.

In 1896, the late Andrew Usher esq. of Blackford park, presented to the Lord Provost and Council the sum of £100,000 to provide a city hall to be used for concerts, the furtherance of high class music and civic functions. The Usher hall, in Lothian road, with frontages also to Cambridge and Grindlay streets, was commenced in 1911. The foundation stones were laid on the 19th July in that year by their Majesties King George V. and Queen Mary, and the hall opened for public use in March, 1914. The hall, including the orchestra and platform, provides seats for about 2,900 persons. There is a fine organ. The approximate cost of the hall and site was upwards of £134,000.

Lady Stair's house, in Lady Stair's close, was presented to the City by the Earl of Rosebery, and is now used as a museum, containing collections of prints, engravings &c.

Club Houses.—The New Club is a superior building in Princes street, erected by an association of noblemen and gentlemen. The University Club, in Princes street, a building in the Italian style, was erected in 1866-7 at a cost of nearly £14,000, and in 1897 was considerably altered and enlarged at a further cost of £11,000. The Scottish Conservative Club and the Scottish Liberal Club have both fine buildings, also in Princes street. The Caledonian United Service Club is situated in Shandwick place and the Northern in George street.

LAW COURTS.

The College of Justice (founded by James V. 1532) comprises the following :—1, Thirteen Judges of the Court of Session, styled Lords of Session ; 2, Advocates (barristers) who possess the privilege of pleading before every court in Scotland, and also in Scotch appeals before the House of Lords ; 3, Writers to the Signet (similar to solicitors in England), Solicitors before the Supreme Courts, Officers of the Court of Session and Advocates' First Clerks.

The Court of Session and Teind Court.—The Court of Session, the highest civil court in Scotland, originally consisted of 14 judges and a president, one half of the judges and the president being churchmen, and the king having the privilege of appointing three or four peers or lords of his great council to sit and vote with the lords of session. Ecclesiastics were appointed judges, even after the Reformation. Till 1808 the judges all sat in one court, but it was then divided into two separate courts, known as the First Division and the Second Division, which, however, might be brought together in cases of difficulty. In 1810 the junior judges were appointed to sit separately as Lords Ordinary, each trying cases in the first instance. In 1830 the number of judges was reduced to 13, including two presidents (of the first and second divisions of the Inner House), who are the Lord Justice General and the Lord Justice Clerk, the former being also Lord President of the whole court. The Lords Ordinary are five in number, forming what is called the Outer House ; the First Division and Second Division, each consisting of three judges and a president, form the Inner House : two judges are attached, one to the Registration Appeal Court and one to the court to try election petitions. Cases may be carried from the Lords Ordinary to the Inner House. The junior Lord Ordinary acts as Lord Ordinary of bills, disposing of summary petitions and business requiring special despatch ; but during the vacations of the court this office is taken by all the judges in rotation, except the Lord President and the Lord Justice Clerk. The judges of the Court of Session are appointed for life, and are always members of the Faculty of Advocates : they assume titles like those of peers, prefixing lord either to their surname or to the name of an estate. The judgment of the Court of Session may be appealed from in the House of Lords. In 1815 trial by jury was introduced in civil cases in Scotland to the extent of deciding as to matters of fact and fixing the amount of damages. Jury trials are presided over by one of the judges. The jury in civil cases consists of 12 jurymen, and a unanimous verdict is received at once ; but if they cannot all agree, the verdict of a majority is received after an interval of not less than three hours. The Teind Court is held every alternate Friday during term, and has the power of regulating and enforcing the payment of tithes or teinds ; for the clergy cannot themselves exact their tithes, which are obtained from the landowners, and not from the tenants, and it is after a decree of this court only that they receive them. It also belongs to this court to determine the amount of stipend which the clergyman of each parish shall receive out of the teinds of that parish, granting augmentations from time to time, when the teinds are not already exhausted. The judges of the Inner House of the Court of Session and one Lord Ordinary are the judges of this court. Belonging to the Court of Session are five silver maces, one of which is used by the Lord Justice Clerk when he sits in the second division, and the others by the Lords Ordinary when sitting with a jury. They are all about 25 inches long and similar in design, having cup-shaped crested heads, adorned with the national badges and surmounted by open crowns, terminating in an orb and cross, and date variously from the 17th to the 19th century. The Lord President's or Old Exchequer mace, made in 1667, is of silver-gilt, and 4 ft. 7⅞ in. long and is borne before the Lord President, and also, once a year, before the Lord High Commissioner at the meeting of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. It very strongly resembles the mace of the House of Commons : the shaft is chased with thistles and roses, and has two round bulging knops and a foot knop and pendant, all richly chased : four graceful brackets support the head, which exhibits the national emblems, crowned, and has above a fillet and an elegant cresting, from which spring four flat arches with raised ornament, and four smaller beaded arches, carrying an orb and cross : on the flat top are the royal arms.

The High Court of Justiciary, instituted 1671, is the supreme criminal court, and is presided over by the Lord Justice General, which office is held by the Lord President of the Court of Session. Next to him is the Lord Justice Clerk and all the judges of the Court of Session are also Lords Commissioners of Justiciary. At stated times, the Lords of Justiciary proceed on circuits, holding courts in different towns. The Lord Advocate is the public prosecutor, and by him actions are raised in this court, according to his discretion. The causes which come before this court are tried by a jury of 15 persons, a majority of whom decide the same, and from which there is no appeal, except on questions relating to habitual criminality. Belonging to this court, and borne before the Lord Justice General, Lord Justice Clerk, or other Justiciary Judges, when presiding at a criminal assize, is a singular mace of iron, the staff of which, swelling towards the base, is quite plain, save for two small moulded bands: three plain scroll brackets support the head, which is cylindrical, and gilt, and the whole surface is occupied by three thistles with leaves displayed, the remainder being pierced out; above this is a broad fillet with slight cresting, and surmounting all is an open crown with six beaded arches.

The Court of Appeal in Criminal Cases.—Under the Prevention of Crime Act 1908, sec. 17, sub-sec. 5, it is provided that a person sentenced in Scotland to preventitive detention may appeal against the sentence to a Court of Appeal which shall consist of not less than three judges of the High Court of Justiciary.

The Sheriff Court of Chancery is presided over by the Sheriff of Chancery.

The Commissary Court.—By the Sheriff Court (Scotland) Act, 1876, the Commissary Courts in Scotland were completely abolished and their powers and jurisdiction in each Commissariot transferred to the Sheriffs of each county. Under that statute the office of Commissary Clerk with its whole powers and duties is now in all counties merged in that of the Sheriff Clerk, except Edinburgh, where the office will be maintained distinct from that of the Sheriff Clerk and regulated by the Act 4, Geo. IV. c. 97, sec. 5.

The Writers to the Signet have the sole right of passing warrants under the seal or signet of the reigning monarch, in order to render them valid; in addition to which they act as conveyancers, and as solicitors in the Supreme Courts. The qualification for admission is an apprenticeship for five years; and the age for entering into indenture not under eighteen, provided always that where an applicant for indenture is not under the age of nineteen and holds a degree in Law, or in Arts, of a University of Great Britain or Ireland, granted after examination, the period of indenture may be three years. The members of this body amount to over 620; they have a valuable library, and an ample fund for widows. Apprentices are admitted to membership on passing a qualifying examination and on payment of entrance fees.

The Society of Solicitors in the Supreme Courts was constituted a Society in 1784, under the name and title of the Society of Solicitors before the Court of Session and other Supreme Courts in Scotland. In 1797, they obtained a royal charter, incorporating them as the Society of Solicitors in the Court of Session, the High Court of Justiciary, and the Commission of Teinds. In 1871 an Act of Parliament was obtained under which they were styled the Society of Solicitors in the Supreme Courts of Scotland. The library contains almost every work bearing on the law of Scotland.

Solicitors-at-Law were incorporated by royal charter in 1780, but the society was wound up in 1886. Solicitors, not being members of the Society of Solicitors in the Supreme Courts, but who have enrolled as Law Agents of the Supreme Courts, are entitled, like Writers to the Signet and Solicitors of the Supreme Courts, to act as solicitors in the Supreme Courts.

The Court of Exchequer.—This court, established in 1707, and which till recently was presided over by the chief baron and three ordinary barons, has undergone such a change as to be virtually abolished. The duties are now performed by certain judges of the Court of Session, in rotation, and the King's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer is the head of the Exchequer office.

The Lyon Court, instituted to regulate state pageants, execute the writs of supreme courts, and decide upon armorial bearings, is still the chief armorial and genealogical authority in Scotland, its official staff consisting of the Lyon King of Arms, three heralds, three pursuivants, Lyon Clerk and Keeper of Records, a Procurator Fiscal and Herald Painter. The offices of the Lyon Court are at the General Register House.

The Faculty of Advocates.—The members of this society occupy a position similar to that of barristers in England. It was instituted in 1532, at the same time as the College of Justice, and was at first limited to ten members. Candidates for admission are required to follow a prescribed course of preparatory study, and to pass an examination —first on general scholarship, and then, after a lapse of a year, on Roman law, jurisprudence, international law, Scots law and conveyancing, constitutional law and history and forensic medicine. An advocate, when admitted, is privileged to plead in any court in Scotland (unless debarred by special statute, as in the Small Debts Acts), and also before the House of Lords. It is from this society that the bench is supplied with judges, and that the sheriffs of counties are selected. Though not possessing a charter of incorporation, it has always exercised corporate privileges, and elects its own office-bearers, the principal of whom is the president, or, as he is styled, the Dean of Faculty. The library of the society is by far the largest, as well as the most valuable, in Scotland.

Sheriff Court of Edinburgh.—The courts are held in the Sheriff court, George IV. bridge. A court for the Leith district is held in the Sheriff Court room, Constitution street, Leith, on Tuesday at 10.30 o'clock in each week during the sessions of court. The Leith district includes the parishes of South Leith, North Leith, and Duddingston (excepting that part of the parish of South Leith which is within the parliamentary boundaries of Edinburgh). Appeals are taken by the Sheriff every Monday and Tuesday at 10.30 o'clock, or other convenient days, and an ordinary court is held every Tuesday and every Friday at 11 o'clock during the session. A Sheriff Small Debt Court for the county of Edinburgh is held within the Sheriff Court, Edinburgh, every Monday and Thursday at 10 o'clock; and for the Leith district every Tuesday at 10.30 o'clock, within the Sheriff Court room, Leith, during the sessions of court. All civil causes are competent in these courts for any debt or demand not exceeding the sum of £20 sterling. Summonses are issued for these courts daily at the clerks' offices, George IV. bridge, Edinburgh, from 10 till 4.

The Justice of Peace Court is of no earlier origin in Scotland than 1609. The Justices are empowered to judge in cases of breaches of the peace; to regulate highways, bridges, and ferries; to see the laws executed against vagrants, beggars, transgressors of the game laws, and frauds against the revenue, besides many other branches of jurisdiction. But the principal business of the justices in Edinburgh comes before them as a court for a speedy settlement of debts under £5, commonly called the Small Debt Court, which sits weekly in Edinburgh.

The Convention of the Royal Burghs of Scotland is an expansion and evolution of "The Court of the Four Burghs," the origin of which is lost. The Convention is a statutory body whose authority and constitution rests on several Acts of Parliament. Its first expansion took place in 1405, and Acts of Parliament continuing its existence and confirming its authority were passed in 1487, 1578 and 1581. Since then, other Acts have confirmed its existence, including the Convention of Royal Burghs Acts 1879 and 1895, which empowered the Parliamentary and Police Burghs respectively, to be admitted into membership. There are presently 200 Burghs on the Roll of the Convention. Each Burgh sends in a Commission appointing one Commissioner and one Assessor, except the cities of Edinburgh and Glasgow which each appoint two Commissioners and two Assessors. The Convention meets annually, when its Preses is elected, and he is invariably the Lord Provost or Provost of the burgh in which the General Convention meets. In former times, the town clerk of the burgh in which the Convention met was also the clerk of the Convention for the year, but now there is a permanent official who holds that office as well as the office of agent of the Convention, i.e., the Secretary. The expenses of the Convention are met partly by Annual Dues payable by the Parliamentary and Police Burghs. The balance of expenditure is allocated according to a scale upon the Royal burghs, 65 in number, and each is liable for its share. The Executive Committee, called "The Annual Committee," is composed of every member on the Roll of the Convention who may choose to attend its meetings, and all are summoned. This committee and the sub-committees meet at frequent intervals throughout the year in the Edinburgh City chambers. The annual meeting place depends on the locality in which the general meeting is held. When in Edinburgh it formerly met in the Court room of the High Court of Justiciary, and afterwards in the Old Parliament Hall of the Court of Session, but these meeting places proving inconvenient the meeting has been held since 1911 in the New Council Hall of the Edinburgh City chambers. The Convention and the Annual Committee, which has conventional powers, deal with all matters affecting the interests of the burghs and the country generally, but its chief work as imposed on it by Statute consists in dealing with Bills brought before Parliament and the amendment of existing Acts.

The Register House is the depository for the public records and registers of Scotland. The records of all suits at law, and the various documents which have been produced in actions before the supreme courts, are also placed here; and in virtue of a late Act, the parish registers of births and marriages have been collected here, whilst herein are deposited the returns of births, marriages, and deaths sent in by the registrars from all parts of Scotland. This establishment, important as it is, is almost peculiar to Scotland. The collection of documents deposited here is immense, and is, of course, accumulating; but few are of ancient date, for the greater part of the papers relating to this kingdom prior to the Restoration were carried away by Edward I., and at a later era by Cromwell; and a considerable portion of those that were suffered to remain were unfortunately lost or destroyed in consequence of a fire in 1700. The most ancient state papers in this house are the letter of the Scottish barons to the Pope in 1320, and the acts of settlement of the Scottish crown upon the Stuarts in 1371 and 1373. The building, finished in 1822 and situated at the east end of Princes street, fronting the North bridge, was designed by Robert Adam, and is a good example of the plainer Italian style: at the angles are large square balustraded towers, hardly rising above the parapet, and surmounted by small turrets, carrying a cupola and vane: the front is relieved in the centre by a pediment and Corinthian pilasters above the entrance; in the centre of the building is a very fine and lofty circular hall, surmounted by a lead-covered dome, 50 feet in diameter. Behind the principal building is another also in the Italian style, completed in 1860 at a cost of £26,440, and available as an additional storage room. The depute clerk register and keeper of the records is (under the Lord Clerk Register and Keeper of the Signet) the actual head of the office, which is divided into several sub-departments, including the General Record, the Historical, the Register, the Great Seal, Privy Seal and Signet offices, Chancery, and Sasine and Teind offices, and other registry departments.

ARTS AND SCIENCES.

The City Observatory on the Calton Hill, was begun in 1776, and completed in 1792. In 1818 the Observatory was extended by the erection of new buildings designed by Prof. John Playfair F.R.S.E. and in 1833 was transferred to the University, and in 1844 to the Government; but in 1889 became the property of the Corporation of Edinburgh, and during the years 1897-1907 the Observatory was further enlarged and a number of valuable instruments provided. William Peck, esq. F.R.S.E., F.R.A.S. is the City Astronomer.

The Scientific Observatory on Blackford Hill, opened 7 April, 1856, by Lord Balfour of Burleigh G.C.M.G. Secretary of State for Scotland 1895-1903, occupies some three and a half acres and consists of the observatory proper, the residence of the Astronomer-Royal, the residences of his assistants, and the Lodge House, together with a number of smaller separate structures required for scientific observations. The highest points of the buildings are the two towers at the east and west ends, one rising to a height of 75 feet and the other to a height of 44 feet. Among the chief astronomical instruments are a 15 inch refractor, a 24 inch reflector and a solar spectroscope. The library, occupying the main floor of the annexe, affords room for about 30,000 volumes, and includes the Crawford collection, in which there are many valuable manuscripts. On the main floor is an experiment room or laboratory, containing a number of physical instruments.

The Royal Scottish Academy of Painting, Sculpture and Architecture, founded in 1826 and incorporated in 1827 and by Royal Charter in 1838 and by supplementary charters in 1891 and 1895, occupies a magnificent building on the north end of the Mound, in Princes street, erected from a design by Playfair, on the model of a Greek Doric temple with fluted columns, the front range supporting a pediment, on which is a statue of Queen Victoria, by Sir John Steell. The building, commenced in 1823, and enlarged in 1836, was erected by the Board of Manufactures, at a cost of £40,000, and when, by the National Galleries (Scotland) Act, 1906, it was assigned to the Academy, an additional sum of nearly £20,000 was expended by the Treasury in adapting it for modern exhibition purposes. The Academy consists of 30 Academicians, and an unrestricted number of Associates. An exhibition is held annually during the months of June, July and August.

The Royal Scottish Museum, Chambers street, was established in 1854 under the name of the "Industrial Museum of Scotland," the foundation stone of the present building being laid by H.R.H. the late Prince Consort, 23rd Oct. 1861; and in 1865, on the completion of the last half of the museum, the Natural History collections in the University were removed to the new building. On 1st Dec. 1864, the name of the institution was changed to that of "The Edinburgh Museum of Science and Art," and under this name it was opened to the public 19th May, 1866, by H.R.H. Prince Alfred, Duke of Edinburgh. The second portion of the permanent building was opened in Jan. 1875, and the west wing in 1888. The present name—"The Royal Scottish Museum"—was conferred in Oct. 1904, and it includes a library of about 20,000 volumes, which occupies part of the west wing. The collections are now extensive and comprise in the Art and Ethnographical department specimens illustrating almost all forms of the art workmanship of various countries at different periods. The Great Hall is devoted to the Arts of Europe, and in the side halls are collections from Egypt, Babylonia, Persia, India, Tibet, China, Japan &c. The Ethnographical section contains a very large and representative collection of the dresses, implements, weapons and ornaments &c. of many savage peoples. In the main hall of the Natural History department there is a finely displayed collection of the larger mammals, and adjoining this are smaller Zoological halls, one of which is devoted to the fauna of the British Isles; there are also very comprehensive collections of birds and fishes, shells and insects &c. as well as a specially prepared collection of zoological types arranged expressly for students of natural history. The principal hall of the Technological department is devoted to the exhibition of a large number of models, chiefly illustrating the appliances used in mechanical engineering. A number of these are sectioned and several are capable of being set in motion by the visitor. The adjoining hall contains specimens and models related to mining and metallurgy, and on the second gallery are large collections dealing with economic botany, forestry, physics and geography. The collections of Scottish rocks and minerals (with which are incorporated the collections of the Geological Survey of Scotland) are also on this floor. The museum is open free.

The National Gallery is immediately south of the Royal Scottish Academy, on the Mound; it was built in 1850-4, at a cost of £40,000, and is a building of the Ionic order, from a design by Mr. Playfair. The collection comprises, besides specimens of the old masters, some good works of more recent painters.

The Society of Arts, was incorporated in 1822, has since obtained the royal charter, and is very efficient in the encouragement of useful inventions, models of which are exhibited at its meetings, which are held once a fortnight in their hall, 117 George street.

The Scottish National Portrait Gallery, Queen street, opened in July, 1889, is in the Gothic style, and to some extent partakes of the features of the Ducal palace at Venice; at the angles are corbelled-out turrets, crowned with spirelets relieved by tall dormers and crocketing, and an open parapet surrounds the whole: the site was purchased at a cost of £7,500. Mr. J. R. Findlay presented, for the erection of the building and towards the endowment of the Portrait Gallery, a sum of £60,000, in addition to which a sum of £10,000 was voted by Parliament. It is intended that while the Gallery should be primarily a collection of portraits of eminent Scottish men and women, it should also embrace portraits illustrative of the history of the United Kingdom. The Antiquarian Museum, removed from the Royal Institution, Princes street, to this building, has a library of about 10,000 volumes, chiefly relating to the archæology of Scotland.

The Royal Botanic Garden and Arboretum of Edinburgh occupies a fine position on the north side of the town, and has its entrance from Inverleith row. The main entrance to the arboretum is at the west side, and can be approached by Stockbridge. This garden, of which the professor of botany in the university is regius keeper, is one of the oldest in the kingdom, having been founded in 1670. Since then it has undergone many changes, both as to situation and extent, to accommodate it to the requirements of the Edinburgh Botanical School, which is the largest in the kingdom. The garden embraces an area of 27 Scotch acres, and is especially adapted for the purposes of tuition: it includes a pinetum, a herbarium, and a winter garden, a special room provided with microscopes for the pursuit of histological botany, class museum, and various ranges of hothouses and greenhouses. The palm house is 100 feet in length, 57 in breadth, and 72 feet in height. The classroom of the professor of botany, the museum, and the house of the curator are situated at the right hand side of the entrance. Admission is free.

The Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland, instituted in 1784, and incorporated by royal charter in 1787, had its privileges further extended by supplementary charters in 1834, 1856, and 1904. The leading purpose of the society is the promotion of agricultural and allied interests; and to this end it offers premiums for reports on almost every subject connected with the cultivation of the soil, the rearing and feeding of stock, the management of the dairy, improvements in agricultural machinery and implements, the growth of timber, the extension of cottage accommodation and the application of science generally to agriculture. The Society holds a large Agricultural Show every year, and awards annual grants to about 300 local societies. It conducts, in conjunction with the Royal Agricultural Society of England, annual examinations for the National Diploma in Agriculture and National Diploma in Dairying.

LIBRARIES.

The Advocates' Library, by far the most valuable in Scotland, was founded by the Faculty of Advocates, in 1682. The collection of manuscripts numbers about 3,200 volumes, relating chiefly to the civil and ecclesiastical history of Scotland, many of which have been printed. The library is estimated to contain over 554,000 volumes. Thomas Ruddiman, the Latinist, and David Hume, the historian, were amongst its librarians. It is one of the five public libraries which still enjoy the privilege of receiving a copy of every book published in the United Kingdom, and students are freely permitted to consult its contents.

The Library of the Writers to the Signet dates from 1722, when the Society of Writers to the King's Signet set aside certain funds for the purchase of law-books. It now forms a general library, and contains about 124,000 volumes, exclusive of pamphlets and tracts. The library is particularly rich in historical, topographical and genealogical works. The privilege of using the library is extended to persons engaged in research, on the recommendation of members. The funds at the disposal of the society for maintaining the library are mainly derived from the entrance fees of its members.

The Library of the Solicitors in the Supreme Courts was formed in 1808, and the present buildings were opened by the Lord Justice-General May 12th, 1892, at a cost of about £30,000. It contains about 22,000 volumes, and is chiefly for professional use, and for consultation during the sitting of the supreme courts. Almost every work bearing on the law of Scotland is included. The Advocates' Library, the Signet Library, and the Solicitors' Library are all located in the Parliament House.

The Library of the Faculty of Actuaries, 14 Queen street, was established in 1856. It contains, besides a large collection of pamphlets, 4,000 volumes exclusively professional and for reference. The library is maintained by the Faculty. The use and privilege of the library is given to all members and all matriculated students of the Faculty of Actuaries and to the members of the Actuarial Society in Edinburgh.

The Royal College of Physicians was incorporated by Royal Charter in 1681. The hall, which is in Queen street, contains a library of about 100,000 volumes.

The Royal College of Surgeons was incorporated in 1505, and is possessed of a most valuable museum, including Dr. Barclay's and Sir Charles Bell's collections of anatomical preparations. The hall, in Nicolson street, is a noble edifice in the Classic style, with a portico supported by six fluted Ionic columns, and was erected in 1833, at a cost of £20,000.

The Royal Medical Society, 7 Melbourne place, numbers about 200 members, but there are life members all over the world. The library contains 30,000 volumes, chiefly medical literature and allied sciences, for the use of members only, though members of the medical profession visiting the city are allowed access to it.

The Philosophical Institution, 4 Queen street, originally established in 1832 as the Edinburgh Philosophical Association, and reorganized in 1846, and again in 1889, affords to its members the means of acquiring the most recent and complete information on all matters of general interest, besides the obtaining of instruction in science, arts, literature, and the enjoyment of various forms of recreation. The Institution now possesses most of the advantages of a literary and social club for ladies and gentlemen, including news, reading and writing rooms, ladies' rooms, smoking rooms, library, lectures, recitals, whist, chess and golf clubs, and literary and dramatic societies. The library contains 31,000 volumes, including a valuable collection of books of reference. W. Addis Miller M.A. sec. and librarian; T. Currie, cashier.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS AND HOSPITALS.

John Watson's Institution, Dean.—In the year 1759, John Watson, writer to the signet, bequeathed the residue of his estate to certain trustees, by them to be applied "to such pious and charitable uses within the city of Edinburgh as they shall think proper." In 1822 an Act of Parliament was obtained empowering the trustees to establish and endow "an hospital for the maintenance and education therein of destitute children, and bringing them up to be useful members of society; and also for assisting in their outset in life such of them as may be thought to deserve and require such aid." The edifice, designed by Mr. William Burn, was founded in 1825, and completed in 1828. About 100 children, who must be fatherless and of the better classes, such as clergymen, officers in the army and navy, legal or medical practitioners, and such like, are here maintained. The establishment is under the management of fifteen directors—the keeper and deputy keeper of the signet, the treasurer of the institution, and twelve commissioners of the writers to the signet.

Donaldson's Hospital, West Coates.—This hospital was founded by James Donaldson, of Broughton Hall, printer, who died in Edinburgh in October, 1830, bequeathing to trustees the greater part of his property, amounting to about £230,000, for the endowment and erection of a hospital for the maintenance of poor boys and girls, after the plan of the Orphan Hospital and John Watson's Institution in Edinburgh. The building, which occupies a commanding position at the west end of the city, is a large quadrangular structure, in the Elizabethan style, from a design by William H. Playfair, and has turreted towers at the angles and a projecting apsidal chapel of late Perpendicular character: it is available for 132 boys and 100 girls, some of whom are deaf and dumb. Those eligible for admission are declared to be—1st "Poor children of the name of Donaldson or Marshall, if appearing to the governors to be deserving;" 2nd, "such poor children as shall appear to be in the most destitute circumstances and the most deserving of admission." The children are clothed and maintained in the hospital, and taught such useful branches of a plain English education as will fit the boys for trades and the girls for obtaining remunerative employment.

The Maiden Trades Hospital, Ashfield house, Grange loan.—This institution was founded in 1704 by the Freemen of the Incorporated Trades, aided by Mary Erskine, widow of James Hair, druggist. The governors were incorporated by statute in 1707. The management is vested in the deacons of the thirteen incorporations, two trades councillors, two persons of the name of Erskine, the preses of the Society of Barbers, and nine persons elected by the other governors, in all twenty-seven. Fifty-four girls are maintained in the institution. Those eligible for admission under presentations held by the Trades Incorporations or the Society of Barbers of the city of Edinburgh are the daughters, granddaughters, or great-granddaughters of freemen or craftsmen, whom failing, any girl qualified by age and otherwise presented by the holder of the presentation. On leaving each girl receives £10 and a Bible.

John Watt's Hospital, Leith.—The late John Watt, merchant in Leith, by his trust disposition and settlement, dated 1827, bequeathed the residue of his means and estate to trustees, with directions for the erection of an hospital in Leith, to be called "John Watt's Hospital," for the reception and maintenance of men and women of fifty-five years of age and upwards who are in destitute circumstances, but who are not pensioners or in receipt of an allowance from any charitable institution except the Parochial Board of South Leith. The following is the order of priority:—1st, Persons of the name of Watt; 2nd, natives of the parish of South Leith of whatever name; 3rd, persons of whatever name who have constantly resided in the parish of South Leith for at least ten years preceding the date of their application; and 4th, natives of, or persons who have constantly resided in, the city of Edinburgh or county of Midlothian. The building, which stood at the south-west corner of the Links, and was opened in 1862, was sold in 1903 to the Leith School Board, and the income of the charity is now expended in the payment of pensions.

Cauvin's Hospital, Duddingston, was founded by Louis Cauvin, teacher of French in Edinburgh, and afterwards farmer at Duddingston, who died in 1825, bequeathing his property for the erection and endowment of "an hospital for the relief, maintenance, and education of the sons of respectable but poor teachers, the sons of poor but honest farmers, whom failing, the sons of respectable master printers or booksellers, and the sons of respectable servants in the agricultural line." This settlement was explained and modified, and the governors incorporated by a parliamentary statute in 1827. The management is in the survivors of certain individuals nominated by the founder, and others assumed by them, and in the following ex-officio trustees, viz., the Lord Provost of the city, the principal of the University, the rector of the High School, the ministers of Duddingston, Liberton, and Newton, the proprietor of the estate of Niddrie, and the factor of the Duke of Abercorn. The institution was opened in 1833, and the number of boys at present maintained there is thirteen.

There are also Industrial or Ragged Schools, of which the first was instituted in 1855, and numerous Sunday schools.

The Orphan Hospital, Belford road, Dean, was projected in 1727, by Andrew Gairdner, merchant in Edinburgh; and in 1733 a house was hired and thirty children received in it. In 1735 new premises were built near the Trinity College Church, but the present building was erected in 1833, from the designs of the late Mr. Thomas Hamilton. About 130 boys and girls, including presentees and boarders, are maintained in the institution, the benefits of which are not restricted by locality. Boarders from any part of Scotland are now received into the hospital at £16 yearly for boys and £14 yearly for girls, which includes all expenses of whatever kind.

Trinity Hospital, the oldest charitable institution in the city, was founded by Mary of Gueldres, in the year 1461, for the reception of thirteen poor persons, but the building was demolished in 1846 to make way for the North British railway, and the funds are now distributed in outdoor relief. The ordinary revenue is about £12,000. By interlocutor of the First Division of the Court of Sessions, of 3rd February, 1880, a new scheme was authorized for the distribution of this charity. The number of pensioners on the higher scale of pension of £25 (one-eighth being incurables) is 129, of whom 17 are appointed by private patrons, and on the lower scale of pension of £15 is 254. Applicants for the benefit of this fund require to have resided in Edinburgh for two years at some time, and supported themselves by their own industry during that period, without aid from any charity, or be widows or children of burgesses, and must be in decayed circumstances at the date of their application, and not under 50 years of age, except where they are prevented from working by incurable disease, in which case there is no limit in point of age. The Wemyss Trust Pension amounts to £15, and has at present 18 beneficiaries: there are also 21 pensioners receiving £10 each from the Lennie Fund, 12 receiving £20 each under the Molleson Bequest, 9 receiving £15 each from the Crighton Trust, and 5 receiving £20 each from the Gibson Trust.

The Royal Blind Asylum and School, incorporated by royal charter in 1898, was formed by the amalgamation of the Asylum for the Industrious Blind, founded in 1793, and the School for Blind Children, founded in 1836, and at one time located in Gayfield square. In 1876 the directors secured four acres of ground at West Craigmillar, a southern suburb, and opened the building now occupied as the female asylum and school. The property in Nicolson street was first bought in 1806, for £1,575, for the male department; since then extensive additions and alterations have been made. A portion of the buildings is arranged as shops and warehouses, with workshops in the rear. The commercial department is at 58 Nicolson st. The inmates now number 284 in all—64 adult females, 165 adult males, and 55 boys and girls—in addition to which there are 140 out-door pensioners. In the industrial department the females are employed in sewing covers for mattresses and feather beds, knitting stockings, chair-caning &c. The males are chiefly employed in making mattresses, brushes, baskets, mats, ship fenders, firewood, printing braille &c. and in the weaving of matting and "rag carpets," a number of looms being employed in this work. Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, in 1853, gave a donation of 250 guineas, to commemorate which one of the pupils (formerly selected by her Majesty) is called the "Queen's Scholar." The governing body consists of the Earl of Haddington K.T. president; four vice-presidents, and nineteen directors, seven of whom represent local public bodies, the remainder being elected by the qualified contributors. The endowments amount to upwards of £19,000.

The Royal Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, established in 1810, is a large plain structure, situated in Henderson row. The original expense of the building, furnishing &c. was upwards of £7,000, and it was enlarged in 1894 by the addition of two wings, at a cost of £7,000.

Crighton Bequest.—By his trust disposition and settlement the late Mr. James Crighton, merchant in Edinburgh, who died in November, 1889, bequeathed to the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Council, and Governors of Trinity Hospital, the sum of £5,000, to be invested to provide pensions of £15 each, with £5 of funeral money; pensioners must be 70 years of age when appointed, but in other respects the qualifications are the same as for Trinity Hospital.

Alexander Fund.—Formerly this fund was administered by the Governors of Trinity Hospital, in conjunction with the Trinity Hospital Fund proper, but by interlocutor of the Lords of Council and Session, of 3rd February, 1880, the management has been vested in a body of trustees, and a scheme adopted by the Court for its future administration. Under this scheme the free income is to be divided amongst eight men and four women, with a maximum pension of £27 15s. 6d.; should however the free income be more than sufficient for this purpose the trustees may elect additional beneficiaries and create other pensions. The present establishment is fixed at 19 pensions of £27 15s. 6d. and 19 of £16 13s. 4d. Applicants for the fund must be unmarried when elected, and not under 50 years of age, excepting any additional beneficiaries whom the trustees may appoint, in the selection of whom there shall be no restriction of sex or marriage. The beneficiaries shall be indigent persons of good reputation who have not fallen into decay through their own vice and prodigality, and who are not in receipt of parochial relief. First, those of the kindred of Mr. Alexander, of Knockhill, who died in 1696, either upon his father's or his mother's side. Secondly, those of the surname of Alexander who shall apply within three score days next after any vacancy shall be publicly announced; and thirdly, other persons qualified as aforesaid as the patrons shall think fit. All persons bearing the name of Alexander, whether as their parents' name or their husband's name, shall be deemed to fall within the favouring clause of the bequest. Applicants not claiming on the footing of being entitled to a preference must have resided in Edinburgh for two years, and for that period must have supported themselves by their own industry, or at least without aid from any charity.

The Magdalene Asylum, originally instituted in 1797, was formerly in Canongate, but now occupies a building at Dalry; this charity is supported by contributions, bequests and the profits arising from the work of the inmates.

The New College Missionary Settlement was founded 1877, in the Pleasance district. The premises, rebuilt in 1890, in the Tudor Gothic style, at a cost of about £5,000, now consist, besides the hall, of a house for the warden and seven students.

The Ministers' Widows' Fund was originated in 1743, and received the sanction of Parliament in 1744, and was established on its present footing by Acts passed in 1778 and 1814. The widow is entitled to an annuity, corresponding to the rate her husband had chosen; and the children, if he leaves no widow, to provisions of £100, £150, £200, or £250, according to the rate the father may have paid.

Horn's Charity distributes the interest of £3,500 to day labourers out of employment at Christmas &c.

The income of Mr. Strathan's Estate is bestowed in small annual sums on poor old people not under 65 years of age, and on orphans not above twelve.

Scougall's Bequest.—John Scougall, a merchant in Leith, bequeathed £2,000, the interest to be paid to daughters of merchants (not shopkeepers) in Leith. They must be Episcopalians, but these failing, members of the Established Church. The beneficiaries are nominated by the clergymen of St. James's.

The House of Refuge, in Canongate, is for the reception of all persons in a state of destitution.

The Royal Infirmary, Lauriston place, was incorporated by Royal Charter in 1736, and the foundation stone of the present building laid in 1870; it was opened in October, 1879, the total cost of erection being £350,000. During the period 1899-1903, three large pavilions were added and include large out-patient departments for special forms of disease, while the ordinary medical and surgical out-patients' departments have been reconstructed; the operating theatres have also been modernized. The infirmary now contains 921 beds for adults and 42 cots for children.

The Hospital for Sick Children, Sciennes road, Rillbank, was founded in 1859; the present buildings, erected at a cost of £40,000, are in the Renaissance style, from the designs of Mr. G. Washington Browne A.R.S.A. and comprise an administrative block in the centre with wings on either side, surrounding open quadrangles; total number of beds, 120.

The Royal Public Dispensary, in West Richmond street, was founded in 1776, by the late Dr. Andrew Duncan, and is liberally conducted. The New Town Dispensary, in Thistle street, was instituted in 1815, and is supported by subscriptions.

Chalmers' Hospital, in Lauriston place, opened in 1864, was erected, and is maintained, by funds bequeathed by George Chalmers, plumber in Edinburgh, "for the sick and hurt." The management of the charity is in the Dean and Faculty of Advocates.

The Church of Scotland Deaconess' (Lady Grisell Baillie Memorial) Hospital, Pleasance, belongs to the Church of Scotland and perpetuates the memory of the church's first deaconess. It has been erected for the purpose of providing practical training in sick-nursing for the deaconesses and foreign mission nurses of the church. The Hospital contains 28 beds. The total cost of the original buildings, including the price of the site and the furnishing and equipment, was £3,766. In 1908 a children's ward and nurses' home were added at a cost, including equipment, of £3,800.

The Royal Edinburgh Hospital for Incurables (The Longmore Hospital), Salisbury place, was founded in 1874 and has since been incorporated by royal charter. A new wing was added in 1893, and there is now provision for 160 patients. A further extension was erected at Liberton in 1906 and contains 45 beds.

MARKETS.

The Waverley Market, in Princes street, is the only market in the city for the sale of fruit and vegetables. The market days are Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. Public meetings, concerts &c. are held in this market. There is also a market in Dublin street, for the convenience of those vicinities.

The Corn and Cattle Markets and Slaughter-houses, opened in 1910, are situated at Gorgie, between the Gorgie and Slateford roads; the buildings and enclosures, erected under the provisions of the "Edinburgh Corporation (Markets, Slaughterhouses &c.) Order Confirmation Act 1903," cover an area of about 15 acres, costing upwards of £77,000: the slaughter-houses are fitted with the most modern appliances and machinery for dealing with animals, of which some 220,000 are killed annually; the Cattle Markets are about 4½ acres in extent, the covered pens occupying 7,000 square yards and being capable of holding 6,800 animals. The Corn Market is a building of stone, 245 feet by 123 feet and is approached by a loggia of Doric columns; it is fitted with a large number of stalls for merchants, with telegraph and telephone call offices; the restaurant is also of stone, and contains a dining hall to seat 250 persons; the private sidings and cattle loading docks are connected with the North British Railway at Gorgie station; seven banks have branches here. The market days are Tuesday and Wednesday.

PLACES OF AMUSEMENT AND RECREATION.

The Theatre Royal, in Broughton street, occupies the site of the old Adelphi Theatre, burned down in 1853.

The Royal Lyceum Theatre is in Grindlay street, the Operetta House in Chambers street, and the Empire Palace in Nicolson street; the Assembly Rooms are in George street, and were erected in 1787; they form part of a plain building, ornamented by a portico.

The King's Theatre, in Leven street, erected in 1906 at a cost of £60,000, will hold about 2,500 persons.

The Queen's Hall, in Queen street, is appropriated to balls and concerts.

The Albert Hall, in Shandwick place, is used for concerts and entertainments, and will seat 850 persons.

The Queen's Park is an extensive area on the east of the city and includes what was the park of Holyrood Palace, embracing Salisbury crags, around which is the Queen's drive, constructed in 1844-47.

Bruntsfield Links are extensive open grounds situated on the road to Morningside, to the south of the city, and is used for the national game of golf. A Roman Catholic Nunnery, the Convent of St. Margaret, was erected here in 1834. To the east of this common are the Meadows, the property of the city, and extending almost to Newington; this tract of level ground, adorned with trees, is about three-quarters of a mile in length and a little less than a quarter of a mile in breadth: the Melville drive passes along the whole length of the southern side.

Further south is the Blackford Park, established by the Corporation in 1884; this, which formed part of the Burgh moor, is a grassy upland, rising to a considerable height and extending over 100 acres. The new Observatory has been built here.

Saughtonhall Park, Gorgie, was purchased by the Corporation in 1900 at a cost of £52,900; it is about 98 acres in extent, part of which is laid out as a golf course.

The Zoological Society of Scotland obtained in April, 1913, a Royal charter of incorporation to establish a national zoological park, promote the science of zoology, maintain a library and museum and to issue scientific publications, the Fellows being entitled to use the designation F.Z.S. (Scot.), ranking equally with the F.Z.S. of London. The Council is formed of 24 members, not more than one-fourth being elected by the Town Council of Edinburgh, the remainder being elected by the society. The number of Fellows on March 1st, 1915, was 2,444. The estate of Corstorphine Hill House was acquired, at a cost of £17,000, by the Town Council of Edinburgh, and feued to the Society, which has the right to redeem, at the purchase price, the feu duty within fifteen years. A public appeal yielded a sum of about £12,000, and the laying out of the park was commenced with the formation of roads, paths, animal enclosures and pools, the latter being mostly quarried from the natural rock underlying the estate. A large and representative collection of animals and birds is in process of formation, partly by purchase and partly by presentation, the natural situation of the park affording scope to exhibit these under conditions closely approaching their native conditions. The houses and shelters are not artificially heated, and the experimental acclimatising of the various animals and birds is proving most successful. The mansion house has been utilised to provide luncheon, smoking and reading rooms for the Fellows, public refreshment rooms, with a portion reserved for the Society's offices. The number of visitors for the year ending March, 1915, was 270,328.

MONUMENTS.

The National monument of Scotland, the most striking feature of Calton Hill, was commenced in 1822, to commemorate our victories during the Peninsular war, but abandoned for want of funds, after £13,000 had been spent, resulting in a collection of twelve columns giving the idea of a ruined temple. The monument to Lord Nelson, also on the Calton Hill, comprises a circular tower, in stages gradually diminishing, 100 feet high, its base being 356 feet above the level of the sea. Monuments to Professor Playfair and Professor Dugald Stewart are placed close together on the Calton Hill. There is also, on the southern side of the hill, near the High School, a monument of Burns; this and the one to Professor Stewart both take the form of a Grecian circular temple: and in the Calton burying ground, a little to the west, is a monument to David Hume. The monument to Sir Walter Scott, inaugurated in Aug. 1846, stands in Princes Street gardens, and is a Gothic structure, rising to the height of 180 feet the lower stage, raised on a graduated platform, is inclosed by open arches, and has engaged pinnacles at the angles. In the centre is a marble seated effigy of the great novelist, with one of his favourite dogs at his feet, the work of Steell. The design of the monument is by Mr. George M. Kemp, who died during its erection, and in the niches are figures of some of the principal characters of Scott's novels and poems. The equestrian statue of Charles II. in Parliament square, was erected by the city in 1685. In the centre of St. Andrew's square stands a column erected to the first Lord Melville (d. 29 May, 1811), the design of which was copied chiefly from Trajan's column at Rome; it was completed in August, 1822; the entire height of the pedestal and pillar is 136 feet 4 inches, and the statue on the top 14 feet additional. Opposite the Royal Bank is a fine equestrian statue of the Earl of Hopetoun, and in the same square, facing George street, a group representing Alexander and Bucephalus was erected in 1884. The equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington (by Steell) stands in front of the Register Office, Princes street. A fine bronze statue (by Chantrey) of William Pitt stands at the intersection of George street and Frederick street; another statue by the same artist, of George IV. with royal robes and sceptre, stands at the point where George street and Hanover street cross. At the intersection of George street by Castle street is a statue of the Rev. Dr. Chalmers (by Steell), erected in 1878, and one of William Chambers, provost 1865-1869, stands facing the National Museum in Chambers street. On the esplanade of the castle there is a bronze statue of the Duke of York, uncle of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, and also a monument to Colonel Mackenzie C.B. who served for 42 years in the 92nd Highlanders, and died in 1878, and one in memory of the officers and men of the 78th Regiment. A fine monumental statue, erected to Robert, 2nd Viscount Melville, stands in Melville street, in the western part of the New Town. In Princes Street gardens are statues of Allan Ramsay, the poet, of John Wilson, the author of "Noctes Ambrosianæ," Adam Black, the publisher, Dean Ramsay, Dr. Livingstone, the great African traveller, and Sir James Young Simpson, bart. M.D., D.C.L.; here also is a memorial to the officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the Royal Scots Greys, who fell in the South African war 1899-1902. At the east end of St. Colme street is an elegant Eleanor cross in memory of Miss Catherine Sinclair, the authoress. The Martyrs' monument, in the old Calton burying ground, is a tall obelisk, erected in 1845, to the memory of several gentlemen who were banished in 1793 for advocating parliamentary reform. There is a monument to Alexander Smith in Warriston cemetery. In Charlotte square, at the end of George street, is the equestrian statue of H.R.H. Prince Albert, inaugurated in August, 1876, on the occasion of Her late Majesty's visit to Edinburgh; the figures, modelled by Sir John Steell R.S.A. are 15 feet high, weighing eight tons, and stand on a granite pedestal 100 tons in weight: the total cost was about £16,500. In West Parliament square is a monument to the late Duke of Buccleuch, which consists of a bronze figure in the robes of the Garter, by the late Sir J. E. Boehm bart. R.A. raised on a pedestal, designed by Rowland Anderson LL.D. and cost about £8,000. On North bridge is a memorial to the officers and men of the King's Own Scottish Borderers, who fell in the various campaigns from the Afghan war to the South African war in 1899-1902. On the Mound is a statue in memory of the officers and men of the Royal Highlanders (Black Watch) who fell in the South African war (1899-1902.

ANTIQUITIES.

Holyrood Palace.—This historical building stands at the eastern end of the Canongate on the low ground which lies to the north-east of Salisbury Crags, and occupies, with the ruins of the Chapel Royal, the site of the Old Abbey of the Holy Rood and the palace erected by James V.; the present building being mostly erected by Charles II. in 1671. The principal front looks to the west and owing to the old north-western tower and the one at the south-west angle built to imitate it (both of which project forward like wings) it has a somewhat baronial appearance marred by the two-storied screen which unites the two towers and is of a French style, as is also the rest of the palace, consisting of a quadrangle 94 feet square, with the two-storied screen on the west and a three-storied building of ashlar with pilasters of three orders forming the other three sides, the lower story having a colonnade of nine arches on each face. The north side of the quadrangle on the first floor is occupied by the picture gallery, 150 feet long, and to the north of the picture gallery are Lord Darnley's apartments and east of these lie the ruins of the fine Early English chapel of the ancient Abbey, now known as the Chapel Royal. In the picture gallery, a long apartment with a rather low roof, are hung pictures stated to be portraits of the kings of Scotland, from Fergus I. downwards, but they are worthless as works of art, and equally so as portraits, having been all painted in 1684-6 by James de Witt, a Dutch painter, who received £240 for the whole. In this picture gallery the peers of Scotland meet to elect their representatives for the House of Lords, and here His Majesty's Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland holds his levees and receptions. The State apartments occupied the southern portion of the quadrangle. There are some gardens at the back of the palace and a statue of H.M. Queen Victoria and a restored copy of the great fountain of Linlithgow ornament the forecourt.

In May, 1537, James V. brought his French bride, Magdalene, daughter of Francis I. to the palace. In 1561, Queen Mary came home to Holyrood palace, a widow of 18, her natural brother, James Murray, being commendator of Holyrood, and on 29 July, 1565, she was married in "The Chapel Royal" to Lord Darnley, son of the Earl of Lennox and her own cousin-german; then followed the murder of Rizzio, the death of Darnley by violence at Kirk-o'-field and the marriage of Mary to Bothwell (whom she created a duke two days earlier) on the 15th May, 1567, in the council room of the palace, followed by her surrender at Carberry Hill, and on 16 June, 1567, she left Holyrood never to return. In September, 1579, James VI. came for the first time to this palace and left it for his new kingdom of England on the 5 April, 1603, and in 1617 he had the Chapel Royal repaired and fitted for service. Conventions of Estates were held at Holyrood in 1631-2-3, and in the latter year King Charles was crowned in the Chapel Royal. In 1650, Cromwell quartered his troops in the palace, and in November of that year a great part of the building was destroyed by fire. In 1679, the Duke of York came to Holyrood and had a private chapel fitted up on the north side of the quadrangle, and when king in 1687 he revived the ancient Order of the Thistle, assigning the chapel of Holyrood as the place for their stalls with banners &c. to be placed, but in 1689 a mob destroyed the chapel and much damaged the palace. The next Royal occupant of the palace was Prince Charles Edward in 1745, who held levees and balls in the State apartments and left it to march to London in October of that year. Charles X. of France (then Count D'Artois) occupied it from 1795 to 1799. In 1822 George IV. visited it, and in 1842 Her late Majesty Queen Victoria held a levee and drawing-room there. His late Majesty King Edward VII., with Queen Alexandra, on their visit to Edinburgh in 1903, also held a Court at the palace, which is still maintained as a Royal residence, the Duke of Hamilton being hereditary custodian.

The Abbey of Holy Rood, founded by David I. in 1128, in memory of his protection from an accident whilst hunting, was dedicated by him to the honour of the Holy Cross, the Virgin and All Saints: it was served by canons of the Augustinian Order, and was reputed to contain a relic in the form of a gold and ebony rood, in which was set a piece of the true cross, said to have been lost in 1346 at the battle of Nevills Cross; the first charter was dated 1147. It had priories at St. Mary's Isle, Galloway, Blantyre, Clydesdale, Rowadil in the Isle of Herries and the Isle of Colonsay. In 1296 John Baliol held a parliament here. In 1322 it was plundered by Edward II. In 1326 Bruce held a parliament in the abbey, and in 1366 a council of nobles was held to protest against the pretensions of the kings of England to the over lordship of Scotland; in 1381 John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, was entertained in the abbey when compelled to flee from England, and in 1385 Richard II. partly burnt it. In 1430 the twin sons of James I. were born in the abbey; six years later the survivor of these, James II., was crowned in the Abbey Church. James III. married Margaret of Denmark here and received as her dowry the Isles of Orkney and Shetland. James IV. in 1503, married another Margaret, daughter of Henry VII. of England, and took her to the new palace he had built adjoining the abbey, and apparently occupying its front courtyard. In July, 1524, James V. (then thirteen years of age), came and assumed the charge of the kingdom with Angus for regent. After having, on several occasions, become dilapidated it was restored about 1460 by Abbot Archibald Campbell, but was partially burned by the English army in 1544 and 1547: yet Queen Mary and her court came here in 1561. In 1569 the materials of the choir and transept were used for the repair of the nave, in which the parishioners of the Canongate were accustomed to worship, and in this nave, in 1590, was crowned Anne of Denmark, Queen of James VI. In 1758 the nave was new roofed with flagstones, but the walls being thus much overweighted gave way, and on 2 December, 1768, the whole roof fell, carrying with it much ornamental work. Of the abbey church there now remains only the nave of eight bays, roofless since 1768: the existing work displays a variety of styles, from Norman to Decorated, and includes the west front with a very fine Early English doorway, two nondescript windows above it and a north-west tower; the walls of the nave aisles, which have interlaced arcading with single light-pointed windows; the south arcade of the nave, consisting of six pointed arches springing from clustered columns and supporting a clerestory of double arches, and the present east end, built across the western end of the intersection and containing three modern Decorated windows: the pavement is composed of numerous tombstones, besides which are some larger monuments, and on the exterior of the south aisle wall are the remains of the cloister. The internal dimensions of the church are: length of nave, 127 feet; breadth, 29 feet 6 inches, and breadth of each aisle, 14 feet 9 inches; height of east end, 70 feet; height of north-west tower, 52 feet by 23 feet square. The 11th Earl of Leven and Melville (10th) K.T. who died 21 August, 1906, by his will bequeathed a sum of £40,000 for the restoration of the church, the execution of the work being made conditional on the acceptance by Lord Balcarres and Sir John Stirling Maxwell of the responsibility of supervising it.

Moray House, on the south side of Canongate, was erected in 1618 by Mary, Countess of Home, eldest daughter of Lord Dudley, and remained in the Earl of Moray's family until 1835. It was the residence of Oliver Cromwell whilst he was in Edinburgh in 1648. At the time of the Union it was occupied by the Earl of Seafield, the Chancellor of Scotland, and many meetings for deliberation on the question of the Union were held in it. A popular legend represents the Treaty of Union as having been signed in a summer-house in the garden. The house is now occupied as a college in connection with the United Free Church.

On the opposite side of the street is the old Canongate Tolbooth, a relic of antiquity. It is a gloomy but picturesque building, of the end of the 16th century, with corner turrets, a small spire, a clock fixed in a wooden projection and an outside stair, and on its front is the inscription, "Sic itur ad Astra;" up to 1847 it was in use as a prison and is now used for public meetings.

Grassmarket. In the centre of the wide street called the Grassmarket the paving stones are arranged in the form of a small St. Andrew's cross, to mark the spot on which stood until 1785 the notorious "gallows tree," during the period when Charles II. and James II. attempted to enforce prelacy upon the people of Scotland.

John Knox's House, an ancient house at the junction of High street with the Canongate, projects at the terminating corner of the former, narrowing the street several feet at the point called Netherbow. The building was repaired in 1850.

An old house in Lady Stair's close, off the Lawnmarket, erected in 1622, was the residence about 1706 of Viscountess Primrose, subsequently Countess of Stair and an ancestor of the present Earl of Rosebery.

Arthur's Seat, a hill above Holyrood palace on the east of the city, rises to the height of 822 feet above the sea, with a conical summit, and presents on the west a precipitous angle towards the town, forming a line of cliff called Salisbury Crags, behind which lies the valley known as Hunters Bog, now a shooting range, but in 1745 the site of Prince Charles's Camp. From the summit twelve counties are visible. To the north are the ruins of St. Anthony's chapel and Hermitage, and near the foot is St. Anthony's well; west of Salisbury Crags is the lower hill of St. Leonard, where existed in former days a religious establishment and a cemetery. The Queen's Drive, a carriage way made in 1844-47, winds round Arthur's Seat. At the opposite or south-western extremity is the village of Duddingston, with its loch, much frequented by anglers in summer and for skating in winter.

St. Bernard's Well is a medicinal spring near Stockbridge, to the north of the city on the Water of Leith. The water is sulphurous. Lord Gardenstone purchased the property and erected over the well a small Doric temple, with a circle of columns supporting a dome, and having in the centre a figure of Hygeia, the goddess of health.

Restalrig, or Restalric, is about a mile east of the Old Town, between the sea shore and Holyrood House. It was formerly an independent parish, with a collegiate church, the fragments of which are still remaining.

UNIVERSITY OF EDINBURGH

THE Edinburgh University owes its foundation to the Town Council, who in 1561 resolved to apply the ancient ecclesiastical revenues in part to the establishment of "colleges for learning and the upbringing of youth," and was originally known as the "Town's College," and until 1858 the University was under the administration of the Town Council, which also had a large share of its patronage. A charter having been granted by James VI., 14th April, 1582, the college was opened in 1583 for the reception of students, although at first with only one class and one regent or professor. In 1617 James honoured the establishment by calling it "The College of King James VI." By an Act of Parliament passed in 1858, for the regulation of Scotch universities, powers of self-government were conferred upon the University, and under an Act of Parliament passed in 1889, the supreme governing body is now the University Court, consisting of the rector, the principal, the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, the chancellor's assessor, the rector's assessor, an assessor appointed by the Town Council, four assessors appointed by the General Council, and four by the Senatus Academicus. This body is charged with the possession and administration of the whole revenue and property of the University. The Senatus Academicus, consisting of the principal and professors, is empowered to regulate and superintend the teaching and discipline of the University. The General Council, consisting of the chancellor, rector, members of the University Court, the principal, the professors, and the general body of graduates, holds statutory meetings twice annually; makes representations to the Senatus and the University Court; sends four assessors to the Court; and, jointly with the General Council of the University of St. Andrews, elects a member of Parliament. The appointments to such chairs as the Town Council were patrons of are now in the hands of the seven curators, four elected by the Town Council and three by the University Court. The number of professors is now 41, classified into the six faculties of divinity, law, medicine, arts, science, and music. There are also over 60 lecturers in the various faculties, and a large number of university assistants who take part in the educational work of the University. The students are not obliged to adopt any particular mode of living or of dress. None of them live within the walls of the college, as at Oxford and Cambridge. The winter session begins about the middle of October and terminates about the end of March. The summer session extends over the months of May, June and July. The present university buildings include the old buildings, begun in 1789, which cover the site of the "Kirk o' Field"; the new buildings, constructed for the faculty of medicine, and opened in 1884, which are provided with laboratories, class rooms and museums; the music class room, in Park place, erected in 1860, containing a fine organ and a museum possessing a unique collection of musical instruments; the McEwan Hall, for university ceremonies and other purposes, completed in 1897. The John Usher Institute of Public Health, equipped with the best and most modern appliances for teaching and research, was presented to the University in 1902 by the late Sir John Usher; the new engineering department, in Infirmary street, on the site of the old High School; the new natural philosophy department, on the site of the old infirmary; and the students' union, in Park place.

The University Library, the nucleus of which was a collection of books left to "Edinburgh and the Kirk of God," by Mr. Clement Littil, in 1580, contains about 270,000 volumes, besides about 8,000 MSS. Among the latter is the remarkable assortment of historical and antiquarian documents and manuscript volumes bequeathed by the late David Laing. Among other curious MSS. are the protest of the Bohemian nobles against the burning of John Huss; a vellum copy of Fordun's "Scotichronicon," and a variety of beautiful Persian and Abyssinian productions; there is also a remarkable Shakespeare collection. Here also is the Dr. John Rae collection of Franklin and other Arctic relics. The Library Hall, 190 feet long by 50 wide, is a noble room, and is adorned by a large number of busts of late professors of the University.

Belonging to the University is a silver mace, presented 2 Oct. 1789, by William Creech esq. the college bailie, in place of the old mace which had been stolen 29-30 Oct. 1787. It is 2 ft. 3¼ in. long and has a baluster shaft decorated with acanthus leaf ornament: the cup-shaped head bears four circles inclosing respectively the arms of the City and University, a crowned thistle with the letters I. R. VI. and an inscription: over this is a fillet with cresting, from which springs an open arched crown with orb and cross.

LEITH

LEITH, the seaport of Edinburgh, a parliamentary burgh and a coast guard station, is situated on the south shore of the Firth of Forth, at the mouth of the Water of Leith, a stream which rises in the Pentland Hills and flows through the north-west of Edinburgh. It is distant from the Royal Exchange of Edinburgh rather more than one mile and a half; the road between the two is called Leith walk, and is a noble street. The North British railway has two stations in the town and the Caledonian one near the docks. The original name of this town was Inverleith, which signifies the mouth of the Leith; and though it is indebted to its proximity to Edinburgh for its commercial prosperity, it has often suffered greatly from being involved in the fate of that city, and from the jealousy of its inhabitants. In 1485 the magistrates of Edinburgh ordained that no merchant of the city should take an inhabitant of Leith into partnership, and that none of the revenues of Edinburgh should be farmed by an inhabitant of Leith. The first great disaster which befell this rising town was its seizure and burning by the Earl of Hertford, in 1544. Three years afterwards Leith was again visited and injured by the same general, and in the year 1549 it became involved in almost every transaction of importance during the regency of Mary of Lorraine, in her efforts to oppose the Reformation, and sustained the horrors of a protracted siege, a garrison of French troops holding it in the interests of the Regent, while it was assailed by the Reformers and their English auxiliaries. Mary Queen of Scots mortgaged the superiority of Leith to Edinburgh, redeemable for one thousand merks, with reversion in favour of Bothwell, upon which the citizens of Edinburgh marched to Leith, and by taking possession of it, destroyed its independence. In 1643 the Solemn League and Covenant was signed at Leith, and the inhabitants have ever evinced the sincerity of their attachment to it. In 1650, Lambert, the parliamentary general, took possession of the town, and when Monk became commander-in-chief, he resided for some time in it, and by order of Cromwell the citadel was repaired and greatly strengthened. During General Monk's residence he induced a number of English to reside here, who infused a spirit of mercantile adventure into the inhabitants. In 1715 the citadel, or Leith Fort, was seized by the Jacobites, who after holding it a short time, and plundering the custom house, hurriedly evacuated it during the night. This fortress was situated about a quarter of a mile to the west of the custom house, and there only remains of it now the arched gateway. Towards the close of the last century the celebrated Paul Jones threatened it, but a sudden storm coming on, the buccaneer was obliged to make a precipitate retreat. Its subsequent history is involved with that of Edinburgh. The town is irregularly built, most of the older streets being crooked and narrow, and it is divided by the river, here crossed by a stone bridge and three drawbridges, into two parts, called North Leith and South Leith. In 1838, by the Act 1 and 2 Vict. c. 355, Leith was separated from Edinburgh, to which it had been sold in 1567, and the common goods and rates were vested in the provost and magistrates. The burgh is now divided into six wards, and is governed by a provost, four bailies and 10 councillors. The parliamentary burgh was erected in 1832, and in conjunction with Musselburgh and Portobello returns one member. An Act of Parliament was obtained in 1864, for a great scheme of drainage, for the conveyance of the sewage by pipes into the sea to the eastward of the east pier, far from the shore, at the Black Rocks. Gas and water are supplied conjointly with Edinburgh. A new street has been made from Great Junction street to Tolbooth wynd, thus getting rid of many ruinous tenements lying in the oldest part of the town.

LEITH HARBOUR AND DOCKS.

Leith is the largest port on the east coast of Scotland, and in this country it ranks next to Glasgow. The docks are six in number, and with the tidal harbour have a total area of 105 acres, and over 25,000 lineal feet of quayage. The latest, the Imperial dock, which was opened in 1902, has an entrance width of 70 feet, with a depth of water of 30 feet, and has accommodated vessels having a length of 500 feet and a gross tonnage of over 11,000 tons. The docks are equipped with 65 cranes lifting from 30 cwts. to 120 tons by hydraulic, electrical or steam power. The transit sheds are a feature of the port, and there is extensive quay space as well as storage ground for timber, and further ample warehouse accommodation is available adjacent to the docks. About 2,000,000 quarters of grain are imported annually at Leith. The grain elevator at the Edinburgh dock has 103 silos, giving a total capacity of over 100,000 quarters at cheap storage rates, including insurance. The discharging plant consists of a bucket elevator ship's leg of a capacity of 300 tons per hour; two suction elevator towers, each of 60 tons capacity per hour, and a barge leg lifting 100 tons per hour. Excellent despatch is given; for example, the s.s. "Cairntorr" in September, 1914, discharged 5,294 tons of wheat in 29 hours, or an average of 1,800 tons per working day. There is a fish market with harbour and landing quays at Newhaven. Leith is the natural outlet for the Lothian coalfields, whilst being within a short distance of the Lanarkshire and other coalfields of Scotland. About two million tons of coal and bunkers are shipped annually. The coaling equipment consists of five hoists and three cranes, the largest hoists lifting 28 tons to 70 feet above water. The hoists and cranes have capacious sidings, and the railway companies have storage siding for 3,000 waggons. The docks are served by 21 miles of railways, and the Caledonian and North British railway companies work the waggons direct to and from the ship's side. In addition to grain and timber, there are large imports of flour, provisions, sugar, oilseeds, nitrate of soda and esparto. The principal exports are coal, pig iron, oil, ale, sulphate of ammonia, bricks, herrings in brine, paper and potatoes. Under normal conditions at least thirty regular steamers leave Leith weekly for ports in France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Denmark, Russia (Baltic ports and Archangel), Sweden, Norway and Iceland. Overseas, regular liners serve Montreal, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Charente, Oporto, Bordeaux, Malta, Alexandria, Straits Settlements and Japan, whilst coastwise there are frequent fixed sailings to London, Hull, Newcastle, Sunderland, Aberdeen, Inverness, Shetland and Orkney Islands, Belfast, Middlesbrough, Stockton, Hartlepool, Southampton, Bristol, Liverpool and many other Scottish and English ports, and there is daily lighterage connection by canal with Glasgow. The port is equipped with eight dry docks and shipbuilding and repairing yards. The facilities of the port are efficiently maintained and increased as required, all surplus after payment of interest charges on debt being devoted to improvements. A large scheme of extensions, giving increased facilities for the Continental, coastwise and fishery trades, has been authorised and will shortly be proceeded with at an estimated cost of about £300,000.

Shipping for Year 1913.

Entries and clearances of vessels:—

Leith, Foreign and British ports, arrived 1,842, tonnage 1,441,410; departed 1,956, tonnage 1,518,637. In the Coastwise trade 164 sailing vessels arrived at the port with cargoes and in ballast of 17,661, and 2,267 steam vessels of 697,944 tonnage, total, 2,431 vessels of 715,605 tons. The number that departed was 137 sailing of 15,717 tons, and steam 2,295 of 795,373 tonnage, total, 2,432 vessels, 811,090 tons. There were on the register for same year, 224 vesels (sail and steam), tonnage 150,030, and 278 fishing boats, tonnage 5,210; requiring 1,262 men and boys to work them.

In 1913, 1,442 regular fishermen (men and boys), were resident within the limits of the port

The quantity of all fish landed in the Leith district in 1914 was 358,594 cwts.; value, £227,741; the value of fish cured in 1914 was £20,386.

The principal trade of Leith is with Holland, Belgium, France, Denmark, Russia and Norway and Argentine Republic, and with Spain and the United States and India.

The Custom House, a building in the Classic style, with a pediment and portico, is in North Leith, at the end of the lower drawbridge; it was erected in 1812, and cost £12,617; contiguous to it are extensive dock warehouses. The business of the excise office is likewise transacted within it The total amount of Customs revenue collected in 1913 was £1,153,043; in 1914 £1,088,488.

There are two companies in the town engaged in the London and Leith trade, and others in trade between Leith and Hull, Liverpool, Newcastle, Aberdeen, Dundee, Inverness, Wick, Kirkwall, Lerwick, Stirling, Southampton and Belfast. There are also regular lines of steamers to Hamburg, Copenhagen, Antwerp, Rotterdam, Dunkirk, and to New York, Montreal, Baltimore and in the season to Petersburg, Reval and Riga. The principal commerce of Leith lies chiefly in its shipping, foreign and colonial trade. The manufactures of Leith are considerable; they comprise color and paint works, artificial manure works and bone mills, roperies, canvas, sail and soap making, sugar refining, brewing, distilling and tanning, fish curing and coopering. Shipbuilding is also carried on to some extent; there are extensive saw mills and some large flour mills, also works for preserving provisions, railway engine works &c.

There are eleven branches of banks in the town, viz.:—the Bank of Scotland (two), the British Linen Bank (two), the Clydesdale Bank, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland (two), the Royal Bank of Scotland (two) and the Union Bank of Scotland.

The church of North Leith stands to the westward of the town, and was erected in 1814, in place of one built in 1499: it has a lofty tower of three Classic orders, surmounted by a spire, the height to the summit of the cross being 158 feet: the portico is modelled from that of an Ionic temple near Athens: the church will hold a congregation of 2,000. The inhabitants have the right of nominating their minister

South Leith church, originally founded at the end of the 15th century, is situated between Kirkgate and Constitution street; in Constitution street also stands the Roman Catholic Church of Mary, Star of the Sea, and near by the Episcopal Church of St. James.

St. Thomas's church, Shirra brae, founded and endowed by Sir John Gladstone bart. a native of Leith, in 1840, is a handsome building, with turret and spire.

St. John's United Free church is in Charlotte street.

The Mariners' Free church is near the docks, in North Leith.

Restalrig church, restored under the Church Extension Scheme, in 1837, was in connection with South Leith Parish church until 1912, then it was erected into a parish.

The United Free church, in Junction street, was purchased in 1895, and seats 800 persons.

The Episcopal church of St. James the Less, built in 1862, will seat 520 persons, and attached is a mission chapel at North Leith, seating 60 persons. The rectory, net value £400, has been held since 1898 by the Rev. Canon E. F. Hoernlé M.B. of Edinburgh University.

There is also a Wesleyan Methodist chapel in Great Junction street.

The public educational establishments include a boys' charity school, and an industrial school for girls.

The Court House is a handsome structure, situated at the corner of Charlotte street.

Leith was the birthplace of George Wishart, the Scotch reformer, who, for his zealous advocacy of the Protestant cause, was burnt at the stake at St. Andrews, March, 1545-6; also of Hugo Arnot, author of a history of Edinburgh, born 1749, died 1786.

The Trinity House, on the west side of Kirkgate, was originally founded in 1380; the house was built in 1555, and rebuilt in 1816, in the Classic style, at an expense of £2,500.

The Sailors' Home, the foundation stone of which was laid on the 20th September, 1883, by the late Earl of Mar and Kellie (d. 1888), is an edifice in the Scottish Baronial style, situated at the corner of Tower place and Tower street. The principal elevation faces the harbour at Tower place, and is 90 feet in length, with four storeys and attics; the centre tower is 75 feet high and contains a clock with four illuminated dials, 7 feet in diameter; there is a storeroom for seamen's effects, recreation room, reading room, and dining room. Accommodation is provided for 70 seamen and 9 officers. The building cost about £10,200.

There are also Industrial Schools, a Philharmonic Society, and benefit associations, together with Bible and missionary societies, a public institute and library, and other libraries, baths &c. The Council Chamber and Public Offices, in Charlotte and Constitution streets, was erected in 1827, at a cost of about £3,000; various important additions have since been made to meet the increased requirements of the Burgh.

The Poorhouse, at Seafield, was erected in 1909 and provides for 600 inmates.

There are numerous charitable institutions, amongst which may be mentioned the Gladstone Asylum for Incurables and John Watt's Hospital, erected in 1862.

Leith Hospital.—Various charities, mostly of a dispensary character, were united in 1848, under the name of "The Leith Hospital." In 1866, and in 1871, Mr. Williamson Ramsay having bequeathed to the hospital a sum of about £25,000, a surgical and medical wing was built. Various additions have since been made, and the hospital was incorporated in 1907. It contains 110 beds and is well equipped for medical, surgical, gynæcological and eye cases. The number of in-patients during the year 1913 was 1,492, and 18,928 patients were treated in the out-patients' department. Over 5,700 patients were visited in their own homes by the out-door surgeon or by the district nurse. The hospital has been built and is maintained by donations, endowments, legacies and subscriptions. President, Edmund Berry esq.; hon. treasurer, D. M. Bisset esq. 28 Bernard street, Leith; hon. secretary, W. K. Shiels s.s.c. 70 Constitution street.

Leith Nautical College, in Commercial street, opened by Lord Balfour of Burleigh K.T. Secretary for Scotland, 4th February, 1903, is a plain but handsome structure in the Renaissance style, the entrance being adorned by coupled Ionic columns on either side: it is three storeys in height, the lower floor containing library and laboratories &c. the other floors the class rooms, and the roof the astronomical observatory. The object of the college is to provide nautical education in all its departments, suited to the best types of modern ships, including a complete acquaintance with the appliances for attaining high speeds and for labour saving, as well as instruction in wireless telegraphy and other forms of signalling; ship building and the designing of marine motors are also parts of the curriculum. The principal is Mr. J. Bolam, and the staff includes instructors in navigation and seamanship, ship building, marine engineering, electro-technics, and ship surgery and medicine.

The market places of Leith are situated a short way east from the Tolbooth, and were erected in 1819. The areas of the different markets are surrounded with stalls.

GRANTON, a seaport, situated on the Firth of Forth, is also a quoad sacra parish formed out of the parishes of Cramond and St. Cuthbert's; it is about 2½ miles north-north-west of Edinburgh, and the same distance west of Leith. This port is the exclusive property of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1837 an Act of Parliament was obtained for the construction of a pier here—the port of Leith being then ill-adapted for the reception of vessels at low water. The pier, which extends 1,700 feet into the Forth, is built of stone obtained in the immediate neighbourhood, and the depth within the pier at low water is from ten to twelve feet, and at high water about twenty-seven. Extensive breakwaters, exceeding 1,000 yards in length, extend on either side of the pier, thus forming a protected harbour. One of Morton's patent slips is laid down, and there are warehouses for bonded goods. Ship building is carried on on a large scale. There is a large hotel, and the North British Railway Company have a station; and hence passengers are embarked for Burntisland, whence the railway is continued to Aberdeen &c. Goods are forwarded viâ the Forth bridge. It was at Granton that H.M. the late Queen Victoria landed on her visit to Scotland on the 1st of September, 1842. The Caledonian Railway Company has also a station at Granton, and a branch line, for goods only, running to the harbour. The population of Granton quoad sacra parish in 1911 was 1,270. Entries and clearances, Granton :—

Foreign countries and British possessions, arrived 291, tonnage 164,171 ; departed 242, tonnage 125,756. Coastwise, arrived 384, tonnage 147,242 ; departed 497, tonnage 205,363. The number of vessels registered as belonging to the port December 31st, 1913, was 59, of 2,358 tons, and of fishing boats 49, of 2,114 tonnage, employing 424 men and boys.

Value of total imports in 1913 was £916,677, of which £137,091 was butter, £320,142 was paper-making materials and £179,450 petroleum, and of the exports of produce and manufactures of the United Kingdom, £316,449, of which £84,051 was coal, coke and manufactured fuel.

GORGIE is a village in the parish of St. Cuthbert, lying to the south-west of Edinburgh, on the road to Ratho, and has a station on the Suburban and Southside branch of the North British railway.

MURRAYFIELD is a western suburb of the city, situated where the road to Corstorphine crosses the Water of Leith, and has a station on the Leith and Barnton branch of the Caledonian railway.

NEWHAVEN, a fishing village and harbour and a quoad sacra parish erected from that of North Leith, lies about a mile west from Leith Fort with a station on the Leith branch of the Caledonian railway.

TRINITY, a district between Newhaven and Granton, is a residential marine suburb of Edinburgh on the Forth, having a chain pier at which steamboats call, and a station on the North British railway.

STOCKBRIDGE is a district in the north-east of Edinburgh.

DUDDINGSTON, now added to the City and County of Edinburgh, will be found on page 144.

The area of the city, burgh and civil parish, is 10,887 acres ; valuation, inclusive of railways, tramways &c. 1914-15, £3,329,714.
